Panel sends Hansen back to prison

By JANE ROBISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — George Hansen will return to federal prison.

The U.S. Parole Commission on Monday revoked his parole, citing his "unwillingness to comply with the reporting conditions," said spokesman Joe Kravisky.

The former seven-term congressman will serve out his unexpired term through Nov. 1, Kravisky said. Hansen may appeal the decision to the full Parole Commission. But if Hansen chooses to appeal, the commission will not review the matter until the week of July 27, the commission's next full meeting, Kravisky said.

Hansen on Monday was still in Alexandria (Va.) City Jail. Kravisky said it had not been decided when or where Hansen would be moved.

Hansen, convicted for falsifying federal financial disclosure statements, was released from the Federal Prison Camp in Petersburg, Va., on Dec. 19, 1986. Hansen had served six months of a 5-to 15-month sentence.

The former Idaho representative was the first member of Congress prosecuted under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act.

Prior to his December parole, Hansen said he might refuse it if conditions were placed on his release. Had he stayed in prison, his original sentence would have expired this month.

Hansen was required to file financial disclosure statements and receive advance approval to travel.

The commission could have credited Hansen with the time from Dec. 19, 1986, to Jan. 7, 1987, saying it was the only time Hansen was in compliance, Kravisky said.

"In taking the action, the commissioners said it was his unwillingness to comply with reporting conditions and his frequent failure to obtain approval for travel," Kravisky said.

Hansen could not be reached for comment.

His wife, Connie, said she had not received official notification on Monday. She declined to make further comment.

The decision to revoke Hansen's parole was made by commissioners Daniel R. Lopez, Cameron Batjer, G. McKenzie Rast and Jasper R. Clay.

Batjer and Rast were two of the four members who voted in December to grant Hansen an early parole after he had served six months.

Prior to Monday's announcement, a group called the Magic Valley Friends of George Hansen were trying to organize a letter writing campaign to free Hansen. The group, in an advertisement in the Times-News, also was asking President Reagan to pardon Hansen.

A similar letter campaign was conducted last year. Last November, Hansen's attorney, Frank Campbell, said thousands of letters were submitted to the White House on behalf of Hansen.

Lending a 'Holler'

Three 'Punkin' Holler figures caused a number of double takes Monday after they were placed in downtown Buhl to advertise an upcoming blood drawing by the Red Cross. In this photo, Tom Adamson takes a closer look. Blood donations are down this year in Buhl, and those interested are encouraged to donate blood Wednesday between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. at the Moose Hall.

North vowed to shred pile of documents

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane testified Monday that Lt. Col. Oliver North told him "there had to be" a document shredding party on the eve of public disclosure of the Iran-Contra connection.

In a day of dramatic testimony, McFarlane also said President Reagan personally expressed "satisfaction and pleasure" over foreign donations to the Nicaraguan Contras during the time Congress had banned U.S. aid to the rebels.

And, launching the second week of the nationally televised Iran-Contra hearings on Capitol Hill, McFarlane spoke of his anguish over being pressed to pick which one of seven American hostages being held in Lebanon should be released in exchange for a shipment of arms to Iran.

While McFarlane has previously spoken at length publicly about his role in administration dealings with Iran, he offered additional details Monday about initiatives to help the Nicaraguan rebels.

He said he asked North on two occasions, including the day that Attorney General Edwin Meese III disclosed the diversion and that North, then a National Security Council aide, was fired, "Ollie, you did have approval, didn't you?"

Both times, he said, North replied that "You know I wouldn't do anything that wasn't approved."

McFarlane said he didn't ask who might have given such approval.

President Reagan has said repeatedly he knew of no such diversion, and North's boss after McFarlane left the White House in late 1985, Rear Adm. John Poindexter, has declined all public comment on the affair.

The weekend before Meese's disclosure, McFarlane testified, North and he discussed the unraveling situation during a car ride.

"Did North tell there was going to be a shredding party that weekend?" asked Senate committee counsel Arthur L. Liman.

"On that occasion or another I'm closing in on here," McFarlane said, referring to a visit North made to his home on Sunday of that weekend.

"What did he tell you about a shredding party?" Liman asked.

"Well, just that there had to be one," McFarlane said.

North's secretary, Fawn Hall, has told the Iran-Contra independent counsel, Lawrence Walsh, that she helped North shred stacks of documents on that weekend, just hours before National Security Council files were searched by the Justice Department.

One of the key questions in the probe has been whether White House aides were acting on their own initiative or at the president's direction in setting up an aid network for the Contras.

McFarlane said the president responded to the October 1984 ban on direct or indirect U.S. military aid by ordering administration officials to find other ways to get support to the rebels.

"He directed that we make continued efforts to bring the (Contra) movement into the good graces of Congress and the American people and that we assure the Contras of continuing administration support — to help them hold body and soul together — until the time Congress would again agree to support them," McFarlane said.

Dallas' attorney withdraws from escape case

The Associated Press

BOISE — The lawyer who convinced a jury that Claude Dallas was guilty of nothing more than voluntary manslaughter when he shot two game wardens in the head has notified court officials he will not represent him on a prison escape charge.

"This decision is dictated largely by other personal and professional commitments," Boise attorney William Mauk said in a two-page statement issued on Monday. He said he believed Dallas has a viable defense for the escape charge.

Dallas, 37, faces a June 8 preliminary hearing on charges that he escaped from the main state prison on Easter Sunday night 1986 and remained at large for over 11 months before federal agents recaptured him in Southern California last March.

At the time of his escape, Dallas, who had eluded authorities for 16 months before his initial arrest, was serving the maximum 30-year prison term for voluntary manslaughter. A Canyon County jury rejected the prosecution's attempt to prove first-degree murder in the January 1981 killings of Fish and Game officers Conley Elms and Bill Pogue as they tried to arrest Dallas for poaching at his remote desert trapping camp. First-degree murder carries the possibility of the death penalty.

During the previous year while Dallas was on the run, Mauk said he had assumed other civil and criminal cases that he cannot now abandon.

"And I do not believe I can assume the large emotional and financial responsibility of Mr. Dallas' representation without compromising these commitments," he said.

Mauk notified both Magistrate Patricia Borah and the Ada County Prosecutor's office that he was withdrawing from the escape case, and "it now appears likely that Claude Dallas will have to be represented by an attorney paid for by the taxpayers."

He said that was not Dallas' choice and predicted that Dallas

Counsel looking into Meese's ties to company

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An independent counsel launched a criminal investigation Monday of Attorney General Edwin Meese III's involvement with scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp. and Meese said he would sever business ties with his investment manager, who sat on Wedtech's board of directors.

Meese became the first federal official to become the subject of two independent counsels' investigations. In the first investigation, involving whether Meese had rewarded friends with government jobs in exchange for financial favors, an independent counsel found Meese had not violated any laws.

Meese, who acknowledged last month that he interceded in support of efforts by Wedtech, a South Bronx defense contractor, to get a $32 million Army contract when he was White House counselor in May 1982, asked Monday morning that an independent counsel conduct a criminal investigation.

Three hours later, Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns, one of Meese's subordinates, asked independent counsel James C. McKay to conduct the probe because "public confidence in the administration of justice will be better served" by an investigation conducted outside the Justice Department.

McKay then issued a statement saying "the investigation of the matters concerning Mr. Meese will commence immediately."

McKay since Feb. 2 has been investigating former White House aide Lyn Nofziger's lobbying efforts on behalf of Wedtech and now will expand the scope of his work to determine whether the attorney general violated federal conflict-of-interest provisions or other laws.

The attorney general disclosed Monday that he hired a Washington attorney, Nathan Lewin, last Friday to represent him in any criminal investigation of his ties to Wedtech.

McKay agreed with Burns that the investigation should include Meese's dealings with his investment manager, W. Franklyn Chinn, Nofziger and E. Robert Wallach, a longtime associate who introduced Meese to Chinn in 1985 and who wrote Meese a series of memos in 1981 and 1982 on behalf of Wedtech. Nofziger and Wallach both received Wedtech stock.

State agency unveils plan to boost tourism

The Associated Press

BOISE — Tourism — Idaho's No. 3 industry — is "coming of age in the 1980s," says a national travel expert.

As proof, the state Department of Commerce's Division of Tourism Promotion on Monday unveiled a long-range plan for increasing the contribution tourism makes to Idaho's economic resurgence.

A final draft of the division's Tourism Marketing Plan was approved unanimously by the Idaho Travel Council meeting Tuesday in Boise. It was presented at the first Governor's Conference on Tourism, which drew travel industry officials from throughout the state.

The plan calls for an intensified advertising and public relations effort, both by the state and private sector, along with participation in trade shows, direct marketing, cooperative agreements and a number of other strategies to increase tourism in Idaho at least 10 percent by 1990.

The state currently funds its tourism promotion efforts primarily through a 2-percent lodging tax on hotel-motel rooms.

House committee approves increase in national debt limit

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House Ways and Means Committee, moving to forestall a government financial crisis later this month, approved a two-month temporary increase in the national debt limit Monday.

The committee by voice vote sent to the full House a bill to increase the Treasury's borrowing ceiling to $2.32 trillion. Committee chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said the House would vote on the measure on Wednesday.

The government's current debt limit of $2.30 trillion will revert, by law, to $2.111 trillion at midnight Friday. Because the Treasury has already borrowed near to the upper amount, no new government debt — not even sales of savings bonds — will be allowed beginning Saturday and all government obligations would be paid out in cash.

Treasury officials predict the money will run out and the government will be forced to default on its obligations May 28 unless Congress acts. That unprecedented situation would irreparably harm the U.S. government's financial status in the world and cost taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars in the long run, they said.

The national debt is the accumulation of all the red ink since the government's beginning. It was less than $1 trillion when Reagan took office but now totals nearly $2.3 trillion, and interest costs to the taxpayers are expected soon to reach $200 billion a year.

In its official request to Congress, the Treasury said the ideal debt increase would be a $500 billion boost, to $2.8 trillion, to avoid the threat of another debt crisis through the end of the president's term.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said anew Monday that Congress must act quickly.

"We cannot overestimate the effects of such a dereliction of duty," he said. "For over 200 years, the full faith and credit of the United States has been preserved as a matter of fiduciary duty. We have never defaulted on our debt obligations. These would include all interest payments, pension and Social Security payments and contractual obligations."

The bill approved by the committee Monday would expire on July 17, creating a repeat of the current scenario. However, it would buy time for congressional leaders to work out a compromise on budget-reform amendments that lawmakers plan to attach to the legislation.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, has promised to use this year's debt legislation for an amendment to strengthen the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law. That statute, which he helped write in 1985 as an amendment to an earlier debt bill, sets annual deficit goals for Congress with the promise of a balanced budget by the 1991 fiscal year.

Aquino candidates take lead

Opposition leaders charged fraud in the slow vote count.

Presidential spokesman Teodoro Benigno, denying the fraud charges, said an attempt at election-rigging by Mrs. Aquino was as unlikely as finding "hashish in the knapsack of Joan of Arc."

There were 84 candidates for the 24 Senate seats and 1,899 for 200 places in the House of Representatives. Senate seats go to the 24 top vote-getters among all the candidates nationwide, but representatives are chosen by districts.

Maj. Gen. Renato de Villa, the national police commander, said voting was relatively peaceful, despite at least 15 election-related killings. He reported 113 cases of ballot-stealing.

Mrs. Aquino said the election was the cleanest and freest for decades in the Philippines, which has a history of election violence and fraud.

It was the first since Mrs. Aquino replaced Ferdinand E. Marcos, who fled the country Feb. 26, 1986, after two decades as president. Complete official results are not expected for at least a week, but the private National Movement for Free Elections, known as NAMFREL, said an overall trend should become evident Tuesday.

Officials of NAMFREL said returns from 390 of the 104,554 precincts showed candidates of Mrs. Aquino's Lakas-ng Bayan (People Power) ticket leading for 22 of the Senate seats.

Others in the top 24 included former Postmaster General Rollo Golez and actor Joseph Estrada, both from the center-right Grand Alliance for Democracy, according to the NAMFREL figures.

The Grand Alliance party's most prominent candidate, former Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, was running 25th, according to NAMFREL, but the government news agency said Enrile was in the top 24.

No figures were available on House races. Jaime Ferrer, the local governments minister, said the opposition could win up to 70 of the 200 seats if local loyalties overshadowed Mrs. Aquino's national appeal, which has been called "Cory Magic."

Former CIA official Angleton dies

WASHINGTON (AP) — James J. Angleton, director of the CIA's counterintelligence efforts for 20 years until allegations of domestic spying led to his resignation in 1974, died Monday of lung cancer. He was 69.

Angleton's wife, Cicely, said he had been ill since December and that he died at Sibley Memorial Hospital.

A 31-year veteran of the CIA, Angleton was director of the agency's counterintelligence department from 1954 to 1974, when he was forced to retire after disclosure of a widespread program of domestic spying and surveillance by U.S. intelligence agents.

Angleton's official responsibilities included ensuring that Soviet agents did not infiltrate the CIA, and he conducted a futile, decade-long search for a KGB "mole" he was convinced had reached the agency's top echelons.

Angleton's zeal was criticized after his departure, with some of his successors saying the search diverted resources and attention away from the CIA's traditional overseas intelligence-gathering role.

A number of senior CIA officials came under suspicion during Angleton's search for the elusive double agent, leading to inner turmoil and even an allegation that Angleton himself was the infiltrator. A member of Angleton's own counterintelligence staff outlined that theory in a memo to then-CIA Director William Colby, saying the only logical way to explain all of the cases then under investigation was that Angleton himself was the Soviet agent.

Angleton denied the claim and Colby said later that he didn't believe the assertion that Angleton was the infiltrator. But Colby said he did force Angleton's retirement a few months later because the mole hunt was futile and was tying the agency in knots.

and private campground spaces. After 10 percent is allocated for administrative costs, the rest is split evenly between statewide promotion and programs within each of Idaho's six travel regions. The bed tax has generated $1.3 million to $1.6 million annually for travel promotion.

"In past years we have always had a plan of action . . . but this time we are looking beyond the immediate and developing a better ability to forecast and impact tourism in future years," said Carl Wilgus, state director of tourism promotion. "This plan will become our road map."

Wilgus said the 71-page plan, which has been in the works since January, would be updated annually. It will receive special scrutiny after the University of Idaho Department of Wildlands Management completes an in-depth study of Idaho travel and tourism, he said. Results of the study are expected to be available in October.

A "Positioning Statement for the Idaho Travel Council" included in the plan outlines the thrust of the state's tourism promotion efforts.

"The Idaho Travel Council will position Idaho as a destination particularly suited for persons dwelling in urban areas that seek a secluded location for a rewarding vacation experience away from the hassles of everyday modern life," it says.

"Idaho's beautiful scenery and unlimited recreation opportunities provide a variety of vacation opportunities. Because Idaho is largely unknown to many travelers, a vacation in Idaho is uncrowded and unhurried. Thus, the continuing appropriateness of our theme "Discover the Undiscovered America."

The bottom line is more tourism-related tax revenue and jobs. The plan says the state will achieve that goal by increasing awareness of Idaho's destination travel opportunities and encouraging expansion of the state's travel service capabilities.

Specifically, the plan sets the following goals through 1990:

- Increase room tax collections by 6 percent each year.
- Increase inquiries for Idaho travel information to 120,000 a year.
- Increase the number of visitor days by 10 percent.
- Increase awareness within the travel industry of Idaho as a travel sales opportunity by increasing motorcoach and group tours by 25 percent and meetings and conventions by 20 percent.
- Increase private sector cooperative support of the tourism program to $350,000 a year.

To meet those goals, the plan outlines 11 strategy areas, with detailed tactics for each.

Work on the plan began with a one-day workshop in January conducted by John Hunt, director and professor for the Travel and Tourism Program at George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

Hearing

McFarlane said in a 12-page statement he read to the committees at a deliberate pace.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, reacting to McFarlane's comments, declared: "Let no one believe that the president was involved in asking the staff or anyone else to provide illegal support for the freedom fighters.

"But similarly, let no one believe that the president has ever backed away from his belief that the people of Nicaragua deserve a chance for democracy and he has said that to anyone who would listen," Fitzwater added.

Fitzwater acknowledged the president knew that other countries were providing assistance, but the spokesman denied Reagan was aware that administration officials solicited the money. Later, Fitzwater, saying he was correcting his remark, said the president had no knowledge of any funds being solicited illegally.

Reagan himself said he had not watched any of McFarlane's opening testimony. Asked if he still denied that he knew about the solicitation of funds, Reagan said, "I have made answers to those particular questions over and over again and I still stick with them."

McFarlane, appearing in a House hearing room after the committees spent a week in the Senate Caucus Room, discussed his role in Central America policy and his involvement in initiatives toward Iran and related efforts to free American hostages in Lebanon.

It was during questioning by Liman about dealings with Iran that McFarlane outlined the arrangement for shipping 508 U.S.-made anti-tank missiles from Israel to Iran. Administration officials, including the president, hoped that the Iranians would use their influence to gain the release of the U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

However, McFarlane said, an Israeli intermediary told him in September 1985 that only one hostage would be released.

Liman asked if McFarlane was "asked (by the intermediary) to play God and choose one hostage?"

"Yes, and I asked for Mr. Buckley," McFarlane replied, referring to William Buckley the CIA station chief in Beirut.

Liman asked whether it was "a subject of some anguish to be put in the position of having to choose?"

"Yes," McFarlane replied.

"And it brought home to you, I take it, what it really meant to be negotiating for hostages?"

"It was very clear this was not the kind of exchange that was proper," McFarlane said.

Instead of Buckley, it was the Rev. Benjamin Weir who was freed. The Tower commission said Buckley is believed to have died in June.

McFarlane said it was largely at the urging of Israelis that the United States decided to sell arms to Iran, first in hopes of establishing a new relationship and later in an attempt to win freedom for the hostages in Beirut.

McFarlane also touched on the use of Drug Enforcement Administration agents in an operation discussed in testimony last week by retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord.

McFarlane said the president had approved a plan under which the agents would be involved in ransoming the hostages.

"It involved no government funds, but it did involve bribes of guards and people in the chain from the immediate housing of the prisoners to their ultimate escape from Lebanon, yes," McFarlane said.

After McFarlane left the government, he was recruited by the administration and made a secret trip to Tehran in May 1986 as part of an attempt to trade arms for American hostages.

Under further questioning by Liman, McFarlane disclosed that he gave Reagan a note on a 3-by-5 index card informing the president that a foreign ambassador pledged to donate $1 million a month to the Nicaraguan rebels. The card was used, McFarlane said, to conceal the news from other officials attending a briefing for the president.

"I was called to come back and pick up the note card, which . . . expressed the president's satisfaction and pleasure that this had occurred," McFarlane said.

State gains custody of child

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) — A judge on Monday gave the state Department of Health and Welfare custody of a baby girl abandoned less than 12 hours after her birth.

The state will retain custody of the baby for 90 days, when officials can petition for termination of parental rights, clearing the way for the baby's adoption, officials said.

Coeur d'Alene police can't find the baby's mother, who walked away from Kootenai County Medical Center in Coeur d'Alene, where the child was born April 30.

Ralph Kennedy, a child-protection worker, said several families have applied to adopt the baby, called "Abby" by her foster family. The baby could be placed with an adoptive family within 30 days, Kennedy said.

But this time, there appears to be less interest. As of last Friday, a White House spokesman said only a "trickle" of letters had been received.

"It wasn't enough to make the White House issues list," said spokesman Charles Bacarisse.

H.D. Palmer, press secretary for Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, said McClure's office had only received about 30 letters in behalf of Hansen.

Responding to concerns, McClure in a letter said he disagreed with Hansen's treatment when he was arrested in Omaha, Neb., by federal marshals in April.

"Specifically, I don't believe there was any need to place George in hand and leg irons, to charter a jet plane for George's return to Virginia, nor to strip search him and book him under an assumed name," McClure wrote. "These are legitimate concerns to which we must have answers from the federal authorities."

But although McClure expressed sympathy with Hansen's original plight, he said there "appears to be little question that he violated the terms of his parole."

According to the Associated Press, Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, and 16 others are asking the Justice Department for an answer concerning Hansen's treatment when he was arrested.

would continue attempts to find a private attorney to take his case although those efforts have been hampered by restrictions on Dallas' contact with anyone by his attorneys. Supporters of Dallas, who agree with his persistent claim that he was merely acting in self-defense at the time of the killings, have started a defense fund that totals over $1,600.

"Mr. Dallas believes he has a very viable defense to the escape charges against him and, although I am not at liberty to discuss the details, I share that belief," Mauk said. "To a significant degree that defense relates to the conditions of the Idaho State Correctional Institution and how many of those conditions were focused upon him during his three years in prison."

Mauk also said Dallas intends to continue the challenge to his original conviction and sentence. A spokeswoman for the defense attorney said Mauk's statement on Monday involved only his withdrawal from the escape case.

Among the cases Mauk has taken on in recent months has been the first-degree murder charge against Tyrone Edmo in Blackfoot. Last month, Mauk won a court ruling declaring the jury selection system in that county void because it systematically excluded Indians.

Edmo, whose trial is set to begin June 23 under a revised jury system, is a member of the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes and part of their reservation lies within Bingham County.

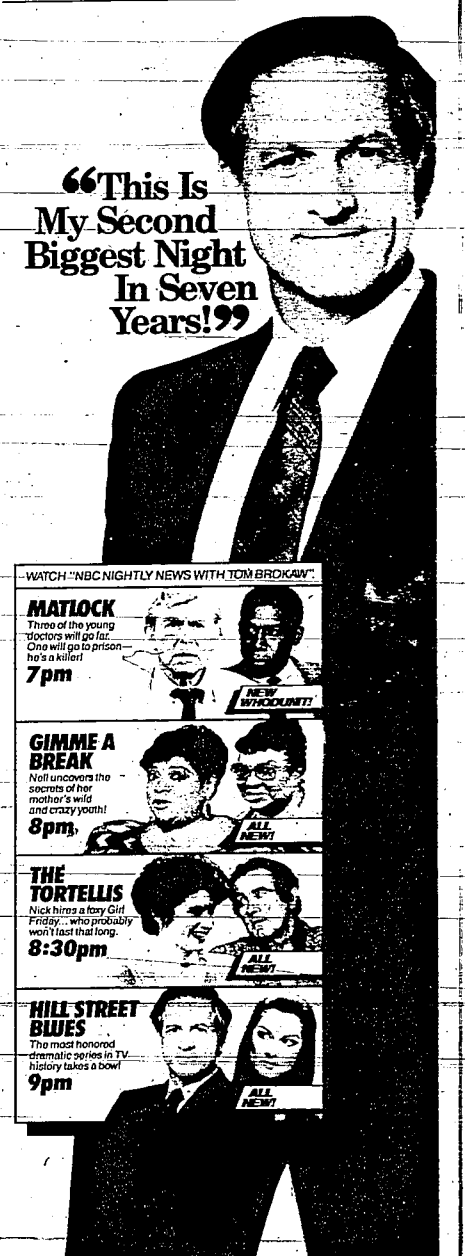
An article in Sunday's Times-News about the state's new drinking age described Brian Parish, a CSI student, as saying that he was never been asked to show identification when he went to a bar or when buying beer. The article did not make it clear that Parish was referring to a period in the past when he drank alcohol as a minor. Parish says he does not drink today and that he participates in alcohol awareness programs.



Idaho PUC delays rate reduction pending written input from public

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Public Utilities Commission has delayed until June 1 the effective date of a rate reduction triggered by the March settlement of a case involving alleged overcharges in Utah Power & Light Co. coal operations.

The PUC ruled Monday that it needs the additional time to consider how Monsanto Co., UP&L's major Idaho customer, should be treated in allocating the $8.6 million reduction.

The commission said it would accept written comments on how the reduction should be implemented until May 21.

In April, the PUC ordered the Salt Lake City-based utility to allocate the benefit of the settlement through a uniform reduction in rates to each customer class.

But Monsanto responded with three different rate-reduction proposals. One was based solely on Monsanto's "firm" or noninterruptible power load; one on its firm load plus 10 percent of its interruptible load, and one on its total load, or all power supplied by UP&L. Rate reductions to Monsanto would be $396,000 under the first plan, $734,000 under the second and $3 million under the third.

The new contract runs through June 1993, with options for subsequent two-year extensions. It includes provisions enabling the PUC to modify the rates should future conditions warrant a change.

The order approving the contract said the PUC was not enlarging the rights of Monsanto or UP&L to participate in proceedings involving Idaho Power or FMC, and was not imposing added obligation to Idaho Power or FMC to supply information in proceedings involving UP&L or Monsanto.

"This contract represents a reasonable management response to retaining Monsanto Co. as a customer, given current market conditions and the balance between Utah Power's loads and resources," the commission said.

Rodriguez, Carrasco admit guilt in firearms conspiracy

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Two men already sentenced to 30 years in state prison for heroin and cocaine trafficking have pleaded guilty to federal charges of conspiring to export guns to Mexico.

Jose Moises Rodriguez-Machado, 33, Rigby, and Gorgonio Carrasco-Lujano, 31, a citizen of Mexico, entered their pleas Monday before U.S. District Judge Marion Callister in Boise.

They earlier had pleaded innocent to charges contained in a federal grand jury indictment accusing them of arranging the exportation of automatic and semi-automatic weapons to Mexico last summer.

The indictment alleged that as part of the conspiracy, Rodriguez and Carrasco traded cocaine, heroin and cash for firearms.

They were arrested last August at the Rexburg airport after delivering more than two pounds each of black-tar heroin and cocaine to a federal undercover agent in exchange for money and guns. The drugs were valued at $1.6 million, and Idaho law enforcement officials said it was the largest seizure of heroin in state history.

Rodriguez and Carrasco agreed to plead guilty to the firearms charges after federal prosecutors told Callister they would recommend that any sentence run concurrently with the 30-year sentences the two received in February on state drug charges.

Frank Dykas, Rodriguez's attorney, told Callister pleading guilty was in his client's best interest not only because of the agreement for concurrent sentencing but because the U.S. attorney's office "has some other charges in the hopper" that could further complicate the case.

Dykas also said a concurrent sentence on the federal charges might help Rodriguez's case in the Idaho Supreme Court.

Idaho Democrats submit 1988 delegate plan for approval

BOISE (AP) — State Democratic Party Chairman Mel Morgan says Idaho's plan for selecting its 23 nominating delegates to the 1988 Democratic National Convention in Atlanta has been submitted to national party officials for approval.

Under the plan, state Democrats will meet next March 8 in caucuses in each of the state's 44 counties to select 381 delegates to the state convention in Pocatello three months later.

Those state convention delegates will be apportioned according to candidate preference and will select the actual nominating delegates and six alternates, who will attend the national convention three weeks later.

Three years ago, two-thirds of Idaho's 22 national convention delegates were committed to former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart.

Media violated Hart's privacy; damaged public interest

Charles Levendosky

Last week, the profession of journalism was sullied by the overzealous reporting of two Miami Herald reporters. The May 3, edition of The Miami Herald plunged into the slime pit of yellow journalism with its front-page story that implied that Gary Hart had committed adultery "with a young woman" in his Washington, D.C., townhouse earlier in the weekend.

It's a sloppy story, carelessly researched and callously written. Yes, Hart had challenged the press to follow him around; nevertheless, that isn't sufficient reason for a newspaper to throw away its journalistic standards.

The Miami Herald, like some little kid, not willing to be outdone, took Hart's dare and dove, cannonball fashion, down to the sub-level of the National Enquirer. And splattered serious journalists all over this country with squalor.

When I telephoned Heath J. Meriwether, executive editor of The Miami Herald, on May 8 to find out the newspaper's rationale, his secretary said that due to Gary Hart's morning announcement that he was withdrawing from the presidential race, The Miami Herald was not answering any questions about its story.

The same Miami Herald, which will attempt to pry into the sexual behavior of a presidential candidate and thereby lever that candidate from the race, won't talk to the press.

Meriwether merely issued a single sentence statement: "We take no joy in the announcement Mr. Hart made today." Hart's decision to drop out of the race is all the more reason to discuss its story, speaks volumes about the Miami Herald's lack of judgment. Not even The Miami Herald likes the hot seat of media scrutiny.

There are two major issues here: the story itself and whether the media has the right to infringe upon the privacy of political candidates.

The final edition of The Miami Herald, May 3, has a headline right beneath the newspaper's banner, "Miami woman is linked to Hart" and then a subhead which states, "Candidate denies any impropriety." The words "linked to" in juxtaposition with the word "impropriety" in the subhead, implies it all. Nowhere does the story use the word "adultery." Yet, without proof, that is what the story actually claims by implication. If it didn't "claim" that, there wouldn't be a story at all.

The lead of the story asserts that Gary Hart "spent Friday night and most of Saturday" with a young woman. A team of reporters put Hart's townhouse under surveillance in order to catch him "womanizing." The team wasn't thorough enough to have been reporters. It might be better characterized as a "morals squad," checking out Gary Hart's morality. This self-righteous team didn't know about the backdoor of the townhouse. The Herald ran the story without acknowledging that the woman might have left by the backdoor, without the morals squad noticing. Shabby work; shoddy story.

Did this team of Miami Herald reporters know that adultery is a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia? Did they call the D.C. police to alert them to a possible crime? Did they read Gary Hart his rights under the Miranda rule when they confronted him about the woman? Here, a news team was acting like a vigilante committee — as police, prosecutor, judge and jury — by its own rules, only. Hart had no opportunity to hire a defense attorney. The team found Hart guilty, on evidence as flimsy as tips by unnamed sources and slovenly surveillance.

Many newspapers will withhold the name of those charged with a sex crime, until there is a determination of guilt, because the allegation of a sex crime is such a terrible burden even if the accusation proves false. The Miami Herald apparently doesn't concern itself about the impact of its own accusations.

Had the police done what this news team did, there would have been a cry from most of the news media about Gestapo police tactics. Yet, many of the media pundits act as if Gary Hart asked for his downfall by challenging reporters. To hell with accurate news reporting, to hell with legitimate rights of privacy — Gary Hart needed to be taught a lesson. The arrogance of the media is what upsets me most; it degrades us, it jeopardizes our credibility, and it endangers our defense of the freedom of the press.

Will other political candidates have to answer, as some television moderator gleefully stated it, "the 'A' question"? What hypocritical arrogance! Are the questioners, themselves, pure in heart and deed? What possible connection can a candidate's sex life have to do with the issues or with the candidate's ability to lead? Have we forgotten the able presidents who, history teaches us, disregarded conventional sexual mores: Thomas Jefferson, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Dwight D. Eisenhower and John F. Kennedy?

The news media by its nature cannot explore the subtle human dimensions attached to sexual behavior; such explorations are too complex, that is the realm of literature. If a man or a woman commits adultery, it may speak more about the relationship between spouses than it does about honesty or the ability to be professional or the ability to lead. The suggestion that a candidate who commits adultery should not or cannot be a good president, is based on simplistic notions of human behavior. Only comic-book thinking would encourage such personally intrusive questioning.

PUBLIC WATCHDOG

The media should be encouraging citizens to enter the public arena, an issue-oriented public arena; it should not be scaring citizens away from public service because of its unwarranted intrusions into the lives of candidates. The press should be working to expand our freedoms, not working to infringe upon citizens' right to privacy.

The right of privacy is a fundamental and compelling right. It is the right to be left alone. It protects our families, our thoughts, our emotions, our personalities and finally, our freedom. No candidate, no matter how high the office to which he aspires, should be forced to give up basic rights of privacy. And it is the highest form of arrogance for the media to act as if candidates must live in a fishbowl because, the speculation goes, "the people want to know."

Right to privacy means every candidate has the right to say, in return, "It's none of your damn business."

Expenses questioned

The Times-News article of May 6, stating Jerome County may be forced to resort to a property tax levy to pay for the Charboneau trial, brought one thought and one question to mind.

The thought was, if a more thorough and professional preparation of evidence had been conducted, it is possible the trial could have been shorter and much less expensive?

Example: A county deputy (for whatever reason) throwing away evidence.

Example: An autopsy that had to be done again after interment, apparently because of an assumption there was no need to be more thorough at the original autopsy, etc.

These unprofessional mistakes make the state prosecutor's job much more difficult. It prolongs and lengthens the trial, increasing costs dramatically.

To help avoid these tremendous expenses, law enforcement officers must be trained in modern evidence gathering techniques and preparation.

My question is — recognizing that motels give government rates, I still wonder why some of our county officials (during the trial at Boise) stayed at one of the most luxurious and expensive motels?

Doesn't a clean, comfortable motel at a considerable less price-per-night deserve some consideration for the Jerome taxpayers?

Prayer for animals

Since May 3 to 7 was National Pet Week, I think the following poem by Albert Schweitzer is most appropriate.

A Prayer for Animals

Hear our prayer, O God, for our friends the animals. Especially for animals who are suffering; for any that are hunted or lost or deserted or frightened or hungry; for all who must be put to death. We entreat the most merciful God, for thy mercy and pity for them. And for those who deal with them, we ask a heart of compassion, gentle and kindly words. Make us true friends of the animals and so share the blessings of the merciful.

Policy is flawed

In the past few weeks there has been much written and very much discussion on the Iran-Contra scandal, but I believe it's time we dealt a little into the effects of this arms deal. The affects of the lives, and the destiny of a very poor country. I think to understand this best, we must look into Nicaragua.

For 35 years these villagers and farmers lived under the most brutal dictatorship government. A government that was endorsed and supported by our own government. During this ragime life was very hard, and life was very cheap. This government was very much like that of the Shan of Iran's government.

Nicaragua is a country which in 1984 only had free elections in the whole country. So why is our CIA waging such a brutal and cruel war for such a small country?

Now I realize that we must stop communist takeovers of any countries and governments when we can, but I think we should examine the means and ways that we conduct these wars. When we become as bad and as hated as the people we are fighting, what do we gain?

I cannot picture any three or five-year-old child as being a card-toting communist and a threat to the U.S. Our government and the CIA (especially the CIA) have grown to the thought, that the end justifies the means.

Well this old country boy, and I'm sure there's a good many more just like me, is here to tell you that that dog just won't hunt.

New radar systems could make U.S. defenses obsolete

Thomas Amlie

WASHINGTON — The invention of radio detection and ranging — radar as it is popularly called — transformed the nature of modern warfare.

American high-technology weaponry ranging from the B-1 bomber to the Aegis cruiser is now so dependent on radar that without it, these weapons cannot perform their missions.

But radar is a double-edged sword, and increasingly the use of it endangers the very weapons that are dependent upon it. This issue — the extreme vulnerability of systems that radiate strong and distinctive signals — has been thoroughly understood by specialists since World War II, but largely overlooked by just about everyone else. The Soviets understand this point very well.

Radars emit powerful and very distinctive pulses of electromagnetic energy. There is a tremendous asymmetry between the distance at which a radar can detect a target and the distance at which a relatively simple "listening" apparatus can detect the radar.

For instance, a typical fighter aircraft radar might be designed to detect another fighter at 50-miles range, but a simple, receive-only system can detect and classify the radar at, literally, thousands of miles, assuming that line-of-sight conditions prevail.

Those readers who have "fuzzbusters" in their automobiles will understand this point immediately. The police have changed their tactics in order to defeat the fuzzbusters; the Department of Defense has not.

An exact analogy that might make this difference more understandable is to imagine a man with a powerful flashlight trying to find another man on a dark night. He might find him at 100 to 200 feet.

The other man can see the flashlight at a range of at least one-half mile. To pursue the analogy a bit further, if the second man has an automatic rifle and homicidal tendencies, the fellow with the flashlight could be in deep trouble.

Operating radars full-time poses yet another problem. Radars have distinctive signatures and relatively simple receiving equipment can classify the type of radar and hence, in general, the type of platform it is mounted on.

Further, if similar radars are to be operated in a formation of ships or aircraft, they must be tuned to different frequencies so as not to interfere with each other.

Thus, the receiving equipment can tell with some precision how many ships or aircraft there are, what type they are and where they are. One could make an argument that we have gone to considerable trouble and expense to give a potential adversary very useful information.

The most serious problem with operating radars full-time is that they are excellent targets for anti-radiation missiles (ARMs). An ARM is, or should be, by far the simplest homing missile to design and build, even simpler than the infrared-homing Sidewinder. Indeed, I designed and demonstrated an ARM using the Sidewinder airframe in 1957.

ARMs are easy to design because:

—The signals being homed on are very strong.

—As a passive weapon, in the sense that it sends out no radar signals of its own, an ARM is not confused by other objects that confuse missiles that do emit radar signals. An ARM picks up a radar signal and tracks it to its source in much the same way that a heat-seeking missile goes to the heart of the flame.

—One knows exactly what type of signal to be expected and can design the ARM to home on this and reject all others.

For many years, NATO and Warsaw Pact alike have deployed ships and aircraft with ELINT (electronic intelligence) equipment on board.

The purpose of this equipment is to record, analyze and classify radiated signals so that in time of hostilities one would know exactly the radar signatures of weapons targets one was launching ARMs against.

The Soviets have been building ARMs (and apparently good ones) since the late 1950s. Indeed, their first air-to-surface (anti-ship missile, the AS-1, was an ARM. Since that time, they have built several more models of anti-ship ARMs. Defense media in the West have reported that the new Soviet air-to-air missile, the AA-10, is an ARM.

Although critics maintain that air-to-air missiles cannot be be used as surface-to-air missiles, the United States has been quite successful in adapting the Sparrow and Sidewinder missiles originally developed as air-to-air missiles to surface-to-air use.

A major reason that our fighter aircraft are large, require a great deal of maintenance and cost upwards of $40 million each is that they are designed around expensive and troublesome radar fire-control systems.

In the presence of air-to-air and surface-to-air ARMs, these radars could not be operated without suffering unacceptable losses. This conclusion applies to both fighter radars and radars used for bombing.

A reasonable question to ask might be, "If we have known for 30 years that a simple ARM could make these complex and expensive systems unusable, might it not have been better to buy larger numbers of smaller, simpler and much cheaper aircraft?"

The media are now reporting that the defense avionics (read "jammers" again) on the B-1B will not be ready for two years or so. This is actually good news, because the jammers make the aircraft a more vulnerable target.

It was gratifying to read that House Armed Services Committee Chairman Les Aspin said that the B-1B's defensive electronics system serves as a beacon illuminating the B-1 as a target. Perhaps there is hope.

The B-1B also carries a terrain-following radar, the transmissions of which can be detected at long range. It would also be an excellent target for an air-to-air or surface-to-air ARM.

The super-secret Stealth bomber program is an expensive and curious anachronism that demonstrates, in a Catch-22 manner, an almost total lack of understanding of the realities of radar both in the Pentagon and on Capitol Hill.

Somewhat simplified, the realities are as follows:

The FAA radar at Washington National would detect a B-1B flying at 10,000 feet altitude at about 100-mile range.

If the Stealth radar cross-section (a measure of how good a radar target it is) were reduced by a factor of 100 from that of the B-1B (a very unlikely event for technical reasons), the radar would detect the Stealth at about 35 miles. To really escape detection, it must fly at very low altitudes. To fly at very low altitudes it needs a terrain-following radar which, as noted above, can be detected at long ranges.

There is yet another problem: A significant fraction of the Soviet air-defense search radars operate at very low (for radar) frequencies, approximately the same as our VHF television channels and FM broadcast band. We tend to dismiss them as "old technology," but they have some useful attributes.

They are inexpensive, detect aircraft very well, are essentially immune to ARMs because of the way they emit signals, are also essentially immune to "stealthifying" techniques and tend to "see" over hills, thus greatly reducing the advantages of flying at low altitude.

In the event of hostilities, one would expect the following systems to become early casualties: the B-1B, F-14, F-15, F-16, F-18, A-6, F-111, AWACS, Patriot air defense system and any ship operating a radar (particularly the Aegis guided-missile cruiser at $1 billion per copy).

In other words, the heart of our tactical-force structure would be rendered impotent. Specialists have understood this point for years. The question is, Why aren't we talking about it — and doing something?

Thomas S. Amlie, former technical director of the Naval Weapons Center in Chian Lake, Calif., is an analyst for the Department of Defense.

Burglaries cause more pain and suffering than law admits

Sigfredo Cabrera

Crimes are classified under different categories for various purposes. "Crime against property" is a legal phrase used to describe a crime, the object of which is property as contrasted with person. Burglary is one such offense.

In California, if the prosecution proves that a person entered a dwelling with the intent to commit theft or any felony, under the law the accused is guilty of burglary and may be imprisoned for two, four or six years.

A close examination of recent statistics and psychological studies shows, however, that the classification of burglary (at least residential burglary) as a property offense is a misnomer and calls into question the adequacy of the prescribed punishment.

According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics of the U.S. Department of Justice, household burglary ranks among the more serious felony crimes not only because it involves the unlawful entry of one's home but also because a substantial number of the violent crimes that occur in the home take place during the perpetration of a burglary. About 68 percent of all rapes and robberies and about a third of all assaults are committed by burglars in the home.

For residents fortunate enough to have avoided the trauma of personal confrontation with the intruder, the invasion of privacy and the disruption of the sanctity of the home nevertheless can have a serious psychological effect that leaves permanent emotional scars.

The initial response on the discovery of the burglary is usually anger, disgust, fear and a sense of being violated. Some victims, however, have been reported to have suffered acute distress manifested by panic, severe shock and uncontrolled weeping.

The long-term effects can be quite serious as well. Feelings of unease and insecurity are common. Venturing out of the home for an evening or a weekend is often accompanied by great anxiety. Returning home, entering a dark room or being alone in the house at night can generate great distress. Thoughts and activities are preoccupied by the violation of personal space and the loss of personal property. A constant, nagging question lingers in the psyche: "Who did this?" Worse yet, for many victims everyone becomes a suspect — casual acquaintances, neighbors, local teen-agers, even friends.

tudies also show that the most profound psychological effects are experienced by women who often analogized their victimization to a sexual assault. Some expressed their revulsion of having a stranger touch their possessions by cleaning everything around the home. Others were reported to have burned their garments or furniture. Still others were so distressed that they felt the need to move from the residence where the burglary took place.

In short, household burglary is potentially a far more serious crime than its classification as a property offense indicates. Recent research findings indicate that the emotional effect of the crime is more detrimental to victims than the financial loss that they may have suffered. Perhaps a re-evaluation of the current minimum and maximum prison terms for this offense is in order.

Recovery won't be overnight

BOISE (AP) — The new economic optimism fostered by this winter's successful legislative session is translating into results, but Idaho's economic revival will not be accomplished overnight, Gov. Cecil Andrus says.

"We've been moving on a number of fronts to create economic development activity, to create new jobs and strengthen our existing businesses," Andrus told the Brigham Young University Management Society on Monday.

"I think we're off to a good start," the governor said, "But it's just a start. . . . There is a great temptation to expect quick-fix results in this business, but, unfortunately, that rarely happens. We cannot expect to repair overnight the effects of six or eight years of neglect and deterioration."

Still, Andrus said that with the multimillion-dollar infusion of cash into the Commerce Department, noticeable economic progress is being made.

The major Idaho commitment at last month's National Food and Agriculture Exposition in Seattle, he said, will probably result in Idaho companies taking several million dollars in orders although there are still no firm figures.

Two different Japanese buying groups will take part in next week's Buy-In-Idaho Marketplace exhibition in Boise because of contacts made in Seattle, and he said there would be an announcement in the next few days about a new business for the state.

Last week's visit to Idaho by a delegation of Chinese grain importers left indications that the Pacific Northwest could sell them grain this year.

The governor also said strides were being made in forging the kind of government-business partnership he predicted would pay big economic dividends in the long run.

"Like every tough journey, this one is taken a step at a time, and so far," he said, "we're marching along pretty well."

Team rescues Eagle lad from ledge over canyon

SWAN FALLS (AP) — A 13-year-old Eagle boy was rescued from a 300-foot-high ledge in the Snake River Canyon nearly seven hours after he became trapped there.

Alan Grose was rescued at 4:15 a.m. Sunday by Ada County paramedics who climbed the sheer walls about six miles east of Swan Falls Dam to reach him.

Mike Irvan, assistant director of the paramedics, said Grose and a friend attempted to scale the 500-foot-high canyon wall. Grose's friend, who was not identified, climbed back down the cliff at about 9:30 p.m. Saturday, but Grose was unable to return the way he had come.

The friend notified Grose's parents who were nearby fishing and four emergency paramedics began climbing the cliff at 11 p.m.

The climbers used ropes during much of the ascent and were assisted that Grose had made it to the ledge unaided, Irvan said. They reached the boy at 1:45 a.m. and eased him down with ropes, an operation which took until 4:15 a.m.

Irvan said the special team planned to go back to the canyon ledge and videotape the route Grose took up the canyon wall.

Executive plans to become conduit

MOSCOW (AP) — The new executive director of the Idaho Board of Education says he plans to be a link between campus leaders and the state board.

Richard Sperring, 56, has been touring Idaho's higher education system during the past week, visiting with top administrators at the state-supported colleges and universities.

"This is going to be one of the key responsibilities in my mind — to spend time at the campuses," Sperring said after a tour of the University of Idaho. "I really wanted to meet the presidents and their key staffs. It ties into what I'm reading on paper."

He was named earlier this month to succeed Charles McQuillen, who resigned effective July 1. Sperring was in Miami on Monday, where he is finishing up a doctoral degree at Florida International University.

He planned to return to Idaho today to attend the state board's meeting in Twin Falls and will move to the state permanently by June 17.

Sperring, who was chosen from among five finalists for the job, said he intends to keep lines of communication open with university leaders.

"My philosophy is the presidents' council has an important agenda. They're going to bring me into that agenda and they're going to run the agenda," he said.

Sperring retired as vice president for administration in 1979 after 27 years with PPG Industries in Pittsburgh. He also has practiced law and was dean of business at St. Thomas University in Miami for one year.

L.M. Boyd — What's what

LAST BORN ARE LOVERS

That first-born children tend to become leaders has been widely reported. But little mention has been made of the claim that last-born youngsters often seem to turn into notable lovers. So say behavioral scientists. It's not the masterful independent individual who's best described as a lover, they aver, but the intense somewhat dependent person.

Q. How many young people in the United States kill themselves every day? Or try to?

A. Fifty-seven try, 18 succeed.

LOVE AND WAR

Consider those people who tell pollsters they're disappointed in their marriages. They're unhappier, they say, than they ever expected to be. One out of six of these also tell pollsters, when further queried, that if they had it to do over again, they'd marry the same partner. Our Love and War man is pondering the notion that you can be committed to unhappiness.

Q. That legendary train called the Wabash Cannon Ball – between what cities did it run?

A. St. Louis and Detroit.

One third of the U.S. gross national product is money that family members who earn it give to family members who don't earn it.

CREATIVE THINKING

Creative thinking is not rare. It's common. When you dream up a rational reason for an absurd notion, that's creative thinking. We're all gifted with it, aren't we? Such is the most popular use of creative thinking, some say.

The Mayflower Pilgrims meant to bring their fishing tackle, but forgot.

Q. Among men in their 20s, which sort are least likely to live to age 30?

A. Fat uneducated Egyptian bachelors who do manual labor.

Taxidermists err. Bears can't snarl. Don't have the right muscles to make the lips curl that way.

Sunrise serenade marks birthday of America's songwriter

They sang Berlin's "I'll be Loving You, Always," as well as "Happy Birthday," "one of the few songs he doesn't hold the copyright to," said John Wallowitch, one of the singers who gathered outside Berlin's East Side townhouse at 5:42 a.m.

"We didn't expect any kind of acknowledgment," said Wallowitch, himself a songwriter. "But when we started, two shades went up on the third floor, where Berlin sleeps.

"We chose sunrise for the symbolism of Mr. Berlin beginning his 100th year," Wallowitch said. "We didn't want to be noisy, but he's too great a man not to be paid tribute to on his birthday."

Wallowitch and his associate Bertran Ross were joined outside the townhouse by two women they had never met, Meg Tierney and Bridgette Vidonas, who had learned of their plans for the seranade.

On Christmas Eve 1983, Berlin invited Wallowitch and 16 other carolers inside for coffee. "He hugged all the men and kissed all the women and said it was the nicest Christmas present he ever had," Wallowitch said.

Berlin, who wrote such holiday standards as "White Christmas" and "Easter Parade," as well as the unofficial national song, "God Bless America," has begun to outlive the copyright on some of his most popular works.

Since his last birthday Berlin has lost the right to royalties from "Alexander's Ragtime Band," which celebrated its 75th anniversary last year and entered the public domain.

Such developments are not lost on the composer, who is said to pay careful attention to his various business interests, including a half-share in a Broadway theater.

"He's still very sharp," according to a longtime employee who asked not to be identified. "He goes for walks, keeps up with all his business affairs."

"He doesn't see very well, and things have to be read to him," said Stanley Green, a music historian. "He always says, 'My health is wonderful from the neck up.'"

Berlin celebrated his birthday quietly with his wife of 61 years, Ellin, and a few other relatives and close friends. Congratulatory telegrams poured in from around the world, including one from President Reagan.

The composer of almost a thousand songs wrote his last musical in 1962, and has stayed largely out of the public eye for the past 25 years.

Berlin, who was born Israel Baline in eastern Russia, was one of the immigrant Americans honored with a special medal last year at the Statue of Liberty centennial celebration, but declined to attend.

He has received three medals for his works and a special Tony award for his contribution to the musical theater.

Since 1939, royalties from "God Bless America" have gone to the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts of America.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — For the Los Angeles Police Department, brushes with fame are an almost everyday occurrence — like running into an armed man who turns out to be Charlton Heston.

According to interviews with LAPD officers in an article in this week's TV Guide, police almost gunned Heston down when he went on the prowl for a prowler in his neighborhood. Luckily, officers recognized the movie star in time and didn't open fire on the shadowy figure with a gun.

Charles Haid, who plays a cop on "Hill Street Blues" could count on a warning when he was caught speeding in Los Angeles, according to one LAPD celebrity "war story." Then he met up with a traffic cop who handed him a ticket. "I hate the stupid show," the cop said.

Steve McQueen harassed the West Los Angeles division for an entire night, racing his sports car up and down Sunset Boulevard at 3 a.m.

"Policemen are competitive," said Sgt. Jerry Bichlmeier. "Finally, after a year, we caught him and gave him a ticket. Eventually, we caught him four of five times, but there were probably 75 times we didn't."

Photographer battling daughter for pictures

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Robert W. Coburn, who photographed Hollywood's biggest stars from 1920 to 1965, is battling his daughter to get back his 7,000-picture chronicle of the Golden Age of movies.

For more than 25 years, Coburn's collection was stored in his daughter's garage. When he asked Julie Benard for their return last November for an exhibit, she refused and he filed suit. The trial opened Monday.

Coburn's collection includes some of the best-known studio portraits of Merle Oberon, Gary Cooper, James Stewart, Humphrey Bogart and Rita Hayworth.

In an affidavit, Ms. Benard said the photos had sentimental value to her. She contends her father had wanted to throw them away, and had never before shown an interest in them.

Her 86-year-old father called her statement "lies — all lies" and said he had disowned her.

"These photographs have great historical significance, and I would like to share them," he said. "This has been so hard on my wife and me, at our age. It has been the most disheartening thing that has ever happened to us."

Nancy plans to check Swedish drug treatment

WASHINGTON (AP) — While President Reagan discusses economies in Italy next month, Nancy Reagan will be studying how the Swedes deal with drug abuse.

The first lady will visit Stockholm on June 8-10 at the invitation of Gertrud Sigurdsen, Sweden's minister of health and social affairs.

While there, she will observe drug abuse prevention and treatment programs, the White House announced Monday. She also will visit projects and meet with representatives of Swedish organizations active in combating drug abuse.

After her trip, Mrs. Reagan will rejoin her husband in Venice, where he will participate in a seven-nation economic summit.

Japanese jazz musician to join migration tribute

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Two performances by Japanese jazz musician Sadao Watanabe will highlight a festival marking the 90th anniversary of the first Japanese migration to Mexico.

Watanabe, who usually plays alto saxophone, first appeared at international jazz festivals at Newport in 1968 and Montreux in 1970. Among his recent albums are "Good Time for Love," "Tokyo Dating," "Rendezvous" and "Fill up the Night."

He has not performed before in Mexico, where there are now some 8,000 Japanese-Mexicans. His performances Tuesday and Wednesday are sold out.

"I'm not so young anymore, but I will do the best I can," the 54-year-old musician said, referring to Mexico City's altitude and air pollution.

Agency levies fines against Wilberg Mine owner, operator

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The federal Mine Safety and Health Administration on Monday levied record fines of $111,470 against the owner and operator of Utah's Wilberg Mine, where 27 coal miners perished in a 1984 fire.

The fines, the largest assessed by the Labor Department agency since 1977, were based on 34 alleged safety violations, including $77,000 for nine the agency said contributed directly to the fire.

Mine owner Utah Power & Light Co. of Salt Lake City and Emery Mining Corp. of Orem, Utah, the former operator, have contested the citations, requiring a hearing before an administrative law judge. No hearing date has been set.

Utah Power & Light officials dispute MSHA's findings on the cause of the fire, which has been blamed on a faulty air compressor, and object to the inclusion of the utility's name on the citations, spokesman John Ward said Monday.

"We don't understand why our name is on the complaint, when Emery was operating the mine at the time," Ward said. "We think it's ironic at best that UP&L was prohibited from participating in the investigation because we were not the operator of the mine, and yet now that the investigation is over, they hand us the citations."

UP&L took over operation of the Wilberg and its two other central Utah coal mines in April, 1986.

Attempts to contact officials at Emery Mining or its parent company, Savage Western Industries, were not successful Monday.

Twenty-six men and one woman were attempting to set a world longwall coal-mining record in the 6th Right section when the fire broke out in the main tunnel system on Dec. 19, 1984. Trapped behind the blaze, the miners died of smoke inhalation, authorities said.

After a 21-month investigation, MSHA officials announced last fall that the fire originated at the air compressor, which had been rigged to operate with its on-off switch and heat sensor disconnected. Evidence indicated the compressor may have been inadvertently switched on and left running unnoticed for up to three days before the blaze began.

MSHA leveled the maximum civil penalty of $10,000 in six of the nine contributory violations, said agency spokeswoman Katharine Snyder.

Those include the companies' alleged failure to properly maintain the on-off control switch and heat sensor on the compressor, and failure to examine the compressor, thus allowing the unsafe condition to go undetected.

Others include alleged failure to maintain the separation between intake air and the conveyor belt escapeway, allowing the latter passage to be contaminated by smoke and lethal fumes; failure to train miners properly on use of emergency breathing devices; failure to submit a program to MSHA for approval of instruction of miners in firefighting, escape routes and evacuation procedures; and failure to post a map of escapeways in the 5th Right section where the miners were working at the time.

The agency assessed fines of $7,000 for failure to install the compressor in a fireproof structure or area and $5,000 each for failure to equip the compressor with a fire suppression system and failure to maintain a Mine pager telephone in good order.

The companies were assessed $34,470 for the remaining 25 violations, Snyder said.

While MSHA investigators settled on the air compressor as the cause, fire experts hired by Emery Mining said recently they blame a defective power cable in the roof of a tunnel outside of the section where the miners were working.

William Zeller, executive vice president of Emery at the time, said consultants from the Atlanta-based Forensic Engineering think electricity may have seeped out of the damaged cable and ignited a smoldering fire in the coal that formed the top of the tunnel where the fire was first observed.

However, Ward said UP&L still was conducting its own investigation into the fire's cause but had come to no conclusions.

"As far as UP&L is concerned, we haven't settled on a cause yet," he said. "We're looking at a variety of things, but until we finish all the tests, we won't know."

New evidence brings postponement of Utah murder trial

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Attorneys say new evidence has prompted the postponement of trial for Wesley Allen Hamilton, who is charged with first-degree murder in the 1985 mutilation slaying of a Southern Utah State College student.

Hamilton's non-jury trial was to have begun May 18 in Fillmore before 4th District Judge George Ballif, but the judge granted a prosecution motion for continuance and rescheduled the trial for Aug. 10.

Hamilton's attorney, Marcus Taylor, said Monday the chief witness in the case, Robert Bott, 27, had changed his testimony. Bott originally was charged with the slaying along with Hamilton, but prosecutors dropped the charge before a preliminary hearing a year ago.

Taylor also would not elaborate on the evidence.

"I hesitate to repeat what Bott is saying, because no one knows if it's true," he said.

Inventor of respirator will market it abroad

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The inventor of a new type of respirator says liability costs prohibit him from selling the machines in the United States.

Insurance would cost twice what the machines cost, said Dr. Forrest Bird of Sandpoint, Idaho, an internationally known biomedical engineer.

"No one can expect me to go out and distribute this commercially without insurance," Bird said during a break from a medical seminar he presented at Spokane Community College. "We still can't put them out until we get a more favorable environment as far as malpractice goes."

The new respirators would sell for about $5,000 each, roughly one-fourth the cost of the traditional respirator used for patients who cannot breathe on their own. Bird developed the new respirator about eight years ago and sells them in Europe, South America and elsewhere, he said.

Between 3,000 and 4,000 of the machines are in commercial use outside the United States. Another 1,000 are on loan to 32 medical centers in the United States to test the machines' ability to keep patients alive who cannot breathe on their own, Bird said.

Selling the machines in the United States would mean about $10,000 each year in product liability insurance for each machine, Bird said. Product liability insurance would protect the investor from potential lawsuits that allege the machine is unsafe.

The newest machines produce up to 1,051 tiny breaths a minute. It is more gentle on the lungs than traditional respirators and tends to increase blood flow through the organs, Bird said.

The puffs of air can be adjusted so the machines can be used on everyone from premature infants to the elderly, he said.

Utah governor drafts plans for drug grant

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Gov. Norm Bangerter on Monday outlined plans for more than $4 million in federal money to be used in the battle against illegal drug use in Utah.

Bangerter said the money would pay for drug prevention and treatment programs and would help finance undercover drug enforcement operations by state and local agencies.

"We have to do more. We think we can use this money well in our law enforcement and education programs," Bangerter said in a news conference.

He said the state is getting $4.1 million as a result of the Drug Free Schools and Community Act passed by Congress last year, which allocated to individual states hundreds of millions of dollars to beef up drug-enforcement programs.

Of Utah's share, $1.5 million will go to law enforcement, $1 million to schools for education programs and $1.5 million for statewide drug prevention and treatment programs.

Bangerter aide Stephen Mecham said little of the money will be used to hire additional staff, with most going to improve current anti-drug efforts.

The governor has asked local school districts and university officials to develop drug-abuse programs tailored to each campus. In a letter to education leaders, he asked for the plans to be submitted to his office by Oct. 1.

Bangerter said the grant requires the state to match the $1.5 million appropriated for law enforcement.

Dave Walsh, administrator of the state Commission on Criminal and Juvenile Justice, said much of the matching money probably will be raised through seizure of cash and other assets of drug dealers.

Twin Falls County votes on jail bond today

By the Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Today is the day to vote on a new jail for Twin Falls County.

Pre-registration is not required to vote on a $3.8 million bond issue to finance a new 90-bed Twin Falls County Jail, but voters must vote in the precinct they're registered in.

If passed, the bond will result in a property tax increase of 18 cents per every $1,000 valuation on property. That works out to about $4 a year on a $40,000 house with a homeowners exemption and about $18 per year on a business valued at $100,000.

The county has paid $300,000 on bills related to a lawsuit over the conditions at the jail filed by two former inmates two years ago.

Anyone 18 years of age and older who has resided in the county for more than 30 days is qualified to vote. At the polling places on the day of the election, voters must sign an oath swearing to their qualifications, said County Clerk Dick Pence.

To be successful, the bond issue must gain the approval of a two-thirds majority. If approved, bonds will be sold to finance a new jail that will be built on a county-owned lot next to the Theron Ward Judicial Building near the Courthouse. The bond indebtedness will extend over a 10-year period.

Joe Powlus demonstrates the giant goose decoys he manufactures at his Addison Avenue shop in Twin Falls.

The Trojan goose

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Patent No. 4,581,837 identifies a new species of giant goose native to Twin Falls.

With neck craned to full height, the bird stands 5 feet tall and can be seen from afar by flights of passing geese.

But this is no biogenetic beast. It's a Trojan goose.

When the birds swoop down to join the honkers on the ground, they glide into an ambush. The wings fold out of the giant decoy's back and hunters pop up, shotguns blazing.

Many a gunner already has bagged his limit from the goose-shaped blinds, says inventor Joe Powlus, who owns Honkers Supreme of Twin Falls.

Powlus and his overgrown decoy will appear today on ABC's "Good Morning America" as part of a series on unusual patents. If he's lucky, the national exposure could give his product its commercial wings.

"I hope that somebody will see them on 'Good Morning America' and call me up and offer me something for my patent," the 36-year-old entrepreneur says.

Although the federal government cleared his patent in April, Powlus has been manufacturing the fiberglass goose himself since 1979.

He soaks polyester resin on a fiberglass mesh and applies it to a form. The shell dries, is painted and assembled. The only work done outside his small plant at 259½ Addison Ave. West is some sanding contracted to Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services Inc., a local workshop for the handicapped.

"I've got 10 hours from start to finish in each blind," he figures. This year, Powlus plans to produce between 150 to 200 blinds as well as a few smaller decoys.

So far, Honkers Supreme has found a ready market with advertisements in outdoors and sportsmen's magazines. Hunters are willing to pay the $369.95 retail cost of the blind, Powlus says.

Sugar market has battle on many fronts

By RONDA TAYLOR
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Although domestic sugar consumption has been steadily declining, Larry Correy, the executive vice president of Amalgamated Sugar Co., told the Burley Area Chamber of Commerce Monday that production levels at Amalgamated plants in Idaho and Oregon should remain at the same levels as they have in the past.

However, Correy warned that growers and industry workers shouldn't become complacent because the Reagan administration and consumer groups have targeted the sugar industry for attack. "Sugar seems to be a good area to attack," he said. He also called for industry supporters to consider the use of production controls to help stabilize the market.

The Reagan administration's recent proposal to lower the support price of sugar from 18 cents a pound to 12 cents a pound is "not acceptable to the industry," he said. He accused the administration of seeking changes in the sugar program as an attempt to aid both Caribbean nations and the international banking industry. He said support for international bankers is "perhaps what we think is underlying all of this."

However, the sugar industry has great support from the U.S. Congress and Senate despite the administration's attacks, he said. This support is so strong that the administration had difficulty finding sponsorship for a recent bill proposing the sugar price reduction, while Amalgamated's main office in Ogden, Utah, was quickly notified by the eventual sponsor and warned of the pending legislation, he said.

Domestic sugar consumption has declined because the soft drink industry has abandoned sugar in favor of high fructose corn syrup and artificial sweeteners, he said. However, domestic markets have increased because imported sugar levels have been reduced four-fold in the last 10 years, he said.

Sugar support prices are created by the setting of market stabilization targets, import fees and duties, and quotas fixed in conjunction with the tariff loan program, he said. These supports are not farm subsidies, he said, as they only allow processors to take out loans on a manufactured product until that product is sold.

The Reagan administration was late in setting 1986 import quota levels and then set them too high, he said. Yet the 1986 import quota of 1.8 million tons of raw sugar didn't critically diminish the price of sugar, he said, and the 1987 import levels have been reduced to around 1 million tons.

Correy, who has worked for Amalgamated for the past 19 years, said the company feels "good about the support we've had from the community." It plans to maintain its position in the community and keep factories "up to par," he said. Amalgamated plans to improve production by becoming faster and more efficient, he said.

"We intend to remain strong in the industry," he said.

Former governor John Evans, now president of the Burley-based D.L. Evans Banks, asked Correy why Amalgamated has proposed to reduce the growers' crop price. Correy said that the company feels that growers are favored in their share of the sugar dollars. He said the company believes this has been true over the last 20 years, and that pro-

Dan Peters is picked as new fair manager

By the Times-News

TWIN FALLS — A new manager for the Twin Falls County Fair and Rodeo has been selected to replace Tom Shouse, who announced his retirement earlier this year.

Dan Peters of Boise, who managed the Western Idaho Fair in Boise from 1973 through 1980, has been selected by the fair board, A fair board member who confirmed the selection said a formal announcement is planned for today when Peters will be in Twin Falls to meet with the fair board members.

Peters said he is happy to get back to Idaho and into the county fair business.

In his letter of application submitted earlier this month, Peters told the fair board he has been involved in the fair industry for many years. In addition to the Western Idaho Fair, he has worked with a number of California and Arizona fairs. These include Del Mar, Ventura, Kern County and Riverside County fairs in California and the Maricopa and Coconino County fairs in Arizona.

He told the fair board that he has a background in agriculture, having grown up on a farm and that he has a good understanding of related industries including work with livestock and rodeo. Both Tom and Neoma Shouse expressed their approval on learning that Peters is expected to fill the manager position.

"I've known Dan for a long time," Shouse said. "He's a very capable man and I think it's a good selection. He will do a good job of continuing the fair and we wish him well."

Peters told the Times-News Monday that he and his wife moved back to Idaho recently and that although both are natives of eastern Oregon, they consider Idaho their home.

Former Hagerman attorney disbarred for fraud

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A former Hagerman attorney has been disbarred by the Idaho Bar Association for allegedly forging the names of a client and magistrate court judge in legal documents.

An order of the Idaho Supreme Court signed by Chief Justice Allan G. Shepard was issued March 31, prohibiting Michael Odell Douglas, formerly of Hagerman, from practicing law in the state.

Michael J. Olths, counsel for the state bar, announced that all former clients of Douglas may obtain papers, property or unearned fees from Douglas, whose current address is 4001 West Sherman, Phoenix, Ariz. 85009. Persons wishing to obtain their property may also contact the Idaho State Bar at (208) 342-8956.

The disciplinary order signed by the Idaho Supreme Court chief justice states Douglas was found to have violated the code of professional responsibility by committing fraud.

He is charged with having forged the name of Eileen Wareham, his client in a divorce action, to a divorce complaint and illegally and falsely forged the name of a magistrate to a purported divorce decree. The court said this "reflects on his fitness to practice law."

The court ordered that he be disbarred and his admission to the state bar be revoked after receiving recommendations for such action from the Professional Conduct Board, which investigated the charges. He was also ordered to pay the state bar costs incurred in the investigation and hearings in the case.

Douglas was practicing law in Hagerman until moving to Arizona. Members of the 5th District Bar say he also practiced in Burley and Gooding before moving to Hagerman where he maintained a private practice.

His attorney in the matter is Patricia D. Gaw, of Wendell. She said Thursday that the disbarment is for a five-year period. After that period any attorney who is disbarred may again apply for membership in the bar. However, the applicant then has the burden of proving that he or she has changed and is again qualified to practice law.

Trimester system gets favorable response from community

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Splitting the public school year into thirds rather than in half is catching on in Idaho.

Officials from two pilot programs — at Rigby High School in Jefferson County and Madison High School in Madison County — each report favorable reaction to the change.

"We haven't got a teacher who wants to go back to a seven-period day," said Rigby Principal Jack Wilcock.

Switching to trimesters means students take five classes a day that are 70 minutes long for 60-day trimesters. Semester scheduling featured 47-minute periods, for at least six periods a day, during 90-day semesters, Wilcock said.

Now, two Idaho Falls high schools are asking the state Board of Education to allow them to break school years into trimesters rather than semesters. The state board is scheduled to vote on the issue for Idaho Falls and Skyline high schools Wednesday, during the first of two days of meetings at the College of Southern Idaho.

The board will also discuss distributing $806,000 of nearly $2 million for higher-education research funding. On Thursday, the board plans to interview candidates for superintendent of the State School for the Deaf and Blind in Gooding.

Switching to trimesters was lauded by both principals participating in the pilot program because the longer periods, with fewer passing times between classes, allow teachers to spend more time on classwork. Each principal also reported student, teacher and community support was favorable.

"We thought it (semesters) was too much time in the halls and not enough time in classes," Wilcock said. He added that lab and shop classes require the additional time offered by the 70-minute periods.

Wilcock said "overwhelming support" was voiced for the program during a recent poll.

Madison Principal Michael Ford also cited "many advantages" to trimesters in an April 22 letter to the state board. Included were survey results showing 25 of 26 teachers favored trimesters over the seven-period day.

Students also appeared to favor trimesters, with 479 students saying either they liked the system better or that they had mixed reactions. Only 15 students said they did not like trimesters.

The state board's vote centers around changing the number of classes students are required to take during the school day. State Board Policy requires students to take six classes a day, but trimester students would take only five classes a day.

Many students take seven classes a day during semesters to meet requirements for graduation. But trimester students, with three sections of five courses during a school year, will still have the opportunity to take more classes than during two semesters with seven classes each.

Tax levy meeting set tonight

SHOSHONE — A public information meeting to discuss a proposed supplemental tax levy will be held tonight by the Shoshone School District.

The meeting will take place at 8 p.m. in the Lincoln Elementary School gymnasium. District patrons are welcome to ask questions and comment on a $155,000 request, officials say.

Voters will decide the fate of the one-year levy during the annual school board trustee election May 19.

Superintendent Wayne Waddoups said the extra levy is needed for operation of the Shoshone school system and is the same size as the supplemental levy approved by patrons last year. He said that at least $15,000 of the amount will be applied to an existing operating deficit that is expected to be $75,000 at the end of the fiscal year June 30.

Carey traffic victims released

CAREY — All of the seven persons taken to the Blaine County Medical Center from a Sunday night traffic accident near Carey had been released Monday evening.

State Police reported the collision occurred about 9:45 p.m. on U.S. Highway 20, five miles northeast of Carey. A westbound vehicle driven by Higinio Serrano, 32, of Richfield, crossed the centerline into the path of an oncoming car driven by Gary Martin, 47, of Idaho Falls.

ISP Trooper Kent Oliver said Serrano's car sideswiped the Martin vehicle, causing it to go off the southside of the road and roll over once. The Serrano vehicle went off the highway and vaulted over a driveway, through a ditch and came to rest in a field. Serrano, his wife, Lila, 22, and their four children were in the vehicle.

Martin was hospitalized Sunday night as were Susan Serrano, 4 month old baby, and another Serrano child. Martin was traveling alone. Hospital officials said four were treated and released Sunday night and the three others were released Monday.

Rollover kills California man

TERRETON (AP) — A 54-year-old California man died and a Blackfoot woman suffered minor injuries in a one-car rollover about 10 miles east of Terreton on Idaho 33.

Domingo Pineda, Santa Ana, Calif., died at the scene of the accident Sunday afternoon, said Idaho State Police Dispatcher Julie Smith.

Carla Catalan, 34, was taken to Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center in Idaho Falls where she was treated and released.

Pumping station opens soon

By the Times-News

TWIN FALLS — A $550,000 pumping station serving the industrial district in southeast Twin Falls will go on line about the first of June, project engineer Dave Joerger said Monday.

Joerger gave City Council members a tour of the almost-completed plant near the corner of Eastland Drive South and Eldridge Ave. Monday. The area has been troubled with low water pressure, about 46 pounds per square inch, Joerger said.

He said that wasn't enough water for fire hydrants. The new pumping station, with three pumps, will give the area 85 pounds per square inch of pressure.

The station consists of a small building with three pumps inside and water lines and a 740,000 gallon water tank.

When operational, the station will be able to pump 3,150 gallons per minute, which Joerger said was enough for two fire trucks.

In addition, the station can expand to include one more pump and more than one million gallons of water. The pipes are also sized to allow expansion.

The station will work off the city water system, and only provide more pressure to the district.

This pumping station is a solution to water problems the Greater Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce Industrial District has been having for some time.

In mid-1986, the city tried to drill a well to supply the area with water. However, the well only was pumping 175 gallons per minute, not enough for fire protection and industrial sprinklers.

J-U-B Engineers recommended abandoning the well in August 1986.

Twin Falls man sues auto company

BOISE (AP) — A Twin Falls man has filed a lawsuit demanding an unspecified sum from Porsche Cars North America Inc., contending the company is responsible for injuries he suffered in an accident that left him a quadriplegic.

Craig H. Neilsen said a faulty seat in his Porsche 911S caused his injuries in an accident about four miles north of the Nevada border on U.S. Highway 93 on the night of Nov. 10, 1985.

The lawsuit filed Friday in U.S. District Court in Boise says Neilsen's car went into a skid on the highway and ran tail-first into the front of another car.

The driver's seat in the Porsche allegedly failed, causing Neilsen's head and neck to strike "components" in the back seat area of the car, according to the complaint.

Neilsen's suit charges Porsche Cars North America with negligence, with defective design, manufacture and assembly of the seat, breach of contract and breach of implied warranty.

He asks unspecified special damages for medical care and treatment and lost wages, and unspecified general damages for physical, mental and emotional pain, suffering, disability, lost enjoyment of life and other injuries.

Spokane papers win awards for coverage of extremists

NEW YORK (AP) — Reporters from two newspapers in Spokane, Wash., have won the Paul Tobenkin Memorial Award for a series of articles exposing white supremacist activities in the Northwest, Columbia University announced Monday.

The Spokesman-Review and the Spokane Chronicle were cited for their "comprehensive and groundbreaking exposure of the move by extremists into the region and efforts to combat them," the university said.

The award will be shared by 10 reporters: Bill Morlin, Doug Clark, Russell Carollo, Drew DeSilver, Jim DeFede, Theresa Goffredo, Judy Mills, David Newman, D.F. Oliveria, Connie Rosenwald, Jim Sparks, Cynthia Taggert and Richard Ripley.

The prize was established in 1960, a year after the death of Tobenkin, who worked for 25 years for the New York Herald Tribune.

It honors "outstanding achievement in the field of newspaper writing in the fight against racial and religious hatred, intolerance, discrimination and every form of bigotry, reflecting the spirit of Paul Tobenkin," the university said.

The judges also announced two special citations. Pittsburgh Press reporters Jean Bryant, Alton Fuller and Jerry Byrd were cited for "an unflinching series of articles that explored the realities behind the black community's lack of political and economic power," Columbia said.

Peter Leyden, Kathy Kemp and Carol Ann Campbell of The Birmingham (Ala.) Post-Herald were cited for a series of articles which "sensitively detailed the challenges facing the gay community in that area."

Sedition charges denied by Miles

The pleas were entered by Richard Wayne Snell, 56, of Muse, Okla., who is on death row in Arkansas, and Robert Miles, 62, of Cohoctah, Mich.

Miles and Snell were among 14 people indicted April 21 by a federal grand jury meeting in Fort Smith. Ten of those indicted are accused of sedition, which is the stirring up of discontent, resistance or rebellion against the country.

Thom Robb of Harrison, national chaplain for the Ku Klux Klan, appeared Monday in court to support Miles. He called the indictment "absurd" and said it is persecution for a religious belief.

Goose

At 40 pounds apiece, the man-sized decoys are light enough to be carried into a field. The hunters conceal themselves inside the 3½-foot-tall body and watch for the geese through camouflaged screens in the wings.

Honkers Supreme makes three head assemblies to make the scene more realistic for the geese. One is a "sentinel" pose, with the neck upright as if the bird is scanning the area. In the others, the neck bends toward the ground. One simulates feeding, while the second turns the head upwards slightly as if the goose is looking for its meal.

Wildlife expert Kerry Reese, assistant professor at the University of Idaho, is not surprised that geese will glide in without noticing a goose as big as a man.

"Their size perspective isn't quite the same as ours," he says. Geese and other animals often are attracted by what scientists call a "supernormal stimulus" — something much bigger than life, Reese says.

Approaching from high overhead, the distance may distort the birds' perception. Then, when they land and walk around — sometimes to within a few feet of the fakes — the geese may not recognize the decoys as bird forms. "The scale is so large ... it just disappears from view to them," he suggests.

With dozens of smaller decoys around and hunters honking with goose calls, the appearance is a happily feeding flock.

Powlus brainstormed the ultimate camouflage from his own experiences hunting geese. "It started off just coming up with something for myself and a few friends," he says. The business grew by word of mouth until, about four years ago, Powlus started producing giant Canada geese full-time.

Despite the company's advertising in sporting publications, plenty of goose gunners nationwide still haven't heard of his blind. "I haven't even touched a tenth of a percent of those (capable) of buying the product," he says.

But a brief mention on nationally televised "Good Morning America" could call in hunters — and maybe marketers — like his own decoys.

cessors "still feel there is a slight tilt in favor of the growers." Crop price reduction would create balance, he said.

Evans also questioned Amalgamated's proposal to delay growers' crop payments. Correy said that the company has proposed making a slight delay in payments because of company cash flow problems. "Our cash flow situation is somewhat rough," he said. "Our bankers have told us to make that smoother."

Another local banker, Gene Caldwell of Valley Bank, asked about the "null and void" section of Amalgamated sugar beet contracts, permitting these contracts to be voided in cases when government policy changes. Correy said that these clauses are essential for the company to be responsive to changes in law.

However, the company feels that it will always be able to work with growers and has no intentions of making these contracts null and void, he said.

In response to two questions from Cassia County Commissioner J. Weldon Beck, Correy said that Amalgamated has no current intentions of closing any of its plants. The company did consider closing "a factory or two" about 15 years ago, but considered closing only the smallest ones, he said. It has never considered closing the plant in Paul, he added.

He also said there are no indications that Amalgamated will change owners. However, if the company were to be sold it could continue to operate, he said.

Correy stressed the importance of production controls, and said they have been "generally very fair in approach" to the sugar industry in the past. He said sugar imports are necessary because there are no surplus levels of sugar in the United States. "Without foreign imports to some level, it would be difficult to make the sugar program work," he said.

Consider all costs, risks in cosmetic plastic surgery

In just a few hours, a plastic surgeon can change your looks — and that may change your life. But before deciding on cosmetic surgery, Better Homes and Gardens magazine suggests considering its costs, risks and side effects.

In 1985, 500,000 Americans had facial plastic surgery, according to a study for the American Academy of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery (AAFPRS). The American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons (ASPRS) says the practice has grown 60 percent in the past five years.

Once limited to the rich and famous, cosmetic surgery is now part of the mainstream. "We're seeing older people, office workers, schoolteachers — people who are hardly affluent," says Dr. Bernard Kaye, clinical professor of plastic surgery at the University of Florida at Jacksonville. Some 15 to 20 percent of today's patients are men, ASPRS says.

Cosmetic surgery isn't a trivial matter. Like any surgery, it has risks to be considered.

Question several surgeons. Where will the surgery be done? Does the surgeon have privileges to conduct the procedure in a hospital?

Find local board-certified plastic surgeons from the ASPRS toll-free number (800-635-0635; in Illinois, 312-856-1834). AAFPRS can supply the names of board-certified facial plastic surgeons at its toll-free number (in the U.S.: 800-332-FACE; in Canada: 800-523-FACE).

Typesetter, paper both going strong

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Inside the cluttered, calendar-covered newsroom of the Utah Nippo, 90-year-old Kuniko Teresawa is searching for the right words to finish a story on a Japanese bonsai exhibit. It has taken her three hours to come up with an ending, but time is of little importance.

Kuniko has spent nearly 50 years handpicking thousands of pieces of metal type to put out her monthly four-page Japanese newspaper.

She pushes the sleeves of her blue sweater over her elbows, polishes her magnifying glass and squats to the floor to search the bottom row of her type board for the final intricate characters needed to put another edition of the Nippo to bed. She holds the fine type next to the magnifying glass, the magnifying glass next to her thick eyeglasses, mumbles a few words in Japanese and nods her head.

"My food will taste especially good tonight, because I have worked hard today," she tells her daughter, Kazuko, who drives her to work each day and helps her manage the newspaper. "Tomorrow will be another long day, but that is good. Life is kind to those who work hard and are humble."

Kazuko laughs and helps Kuniko stack the four heavy plates of type. Next week, another issue of the Utah Nippo will be delivered on time to 600 subscribers — that is if the 100-year-old printing press is good for another run.

"It should be OK," says Kazuko. "After all, mother is nearly as old as it is, and she doesn't need an overhaul. She's in better shape than most people half her age."

Kuniko's lips crinkle into a smile. She doesn't understand English, except for the phrase "that is a cat." But she knows Kazuko is discussing her "condition" again and can't understand what all the fuss is about. She is nearly 91 and works seven days a week, but "so what?" she tells Kazuko.

"Why would anybody want to do a story about me?" she asks. "This is just an everyday routine for me. I'm just doing my job." She hangs up her printer's apron, brushes the dust from her hands and leans against the front doorway, a few feet away from the old printing press and the antique racks of pre-World War II Japanese type.

Inside the Nippo office, hidden from the rest of 10th West by towering peach trees and Japanese cherry trees, Kuniko shakes her head and looks through the latest Tokyo newspapers for stories to reprint.

"The old ways take more time," she says, as Kazuko translates, "but old things bring much joy. The reason I have kept working is to bring others joy. There are many people like me, older Japanese Americans who do not speak English. We are called the issei, first-generation immigrants from Japan. There are not many of us left.

"The Nippo's subscribers depend on me to let them know what is happening in Japan. They look forward to getting the paper. I keep working because of them."

Kuniko's late husband, Ueo, started the Utah Nippo, which means "daily," in 1914, shortly after he brought his new bride from Japan to Salt Lake City. During its heyday, the paper had over 10,000 subscribers and employed several reporters and delivery boys to get the news to the stands.

When Ueo died in 1939, Kuniko decided to keep the paper going to support her two daughters, Kazuko and Hanako. She learned to drive a car, then visited the paper's subscribers in Utah, Idaho and Wyoming, to introduce herself and try to sell ads.

She is barely 4 feet, 5 inches tall, wears size two shoes and has a habit of pushing her glasses over her forehead to get a better look at the world.

Daughter hopes to win back her lost parents

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: My parents will be celebrating their 25th anniversary this summer and my brothers and sister are planning a big surprise party for them.

My sister has requested $500 from my husband and me for our share of the expenses. I want to be in on the party, but my husband has flatly refused for the following reason: My parents haven't spoken to us in four months because one month before the wedding my fiance and I moved in together. My parents disapproved but they never asked me not to.

Prior to our living together, both my parents and my husband's parents had agreed to go 50-50 on our wedding expenses. Suddenly, one month before the wedding, my parents cut off all communication with us and refused to pay for half of the wedding.

I was very hurt because we always had a fairly good relationship. Also, my fiance and I had to come up with $3,000 for our wedding at the last minute. To top it off, my folks didn't even give us a wedding gift.

I realize I've hurt them, but I'm really hurting now. I have tried numerous times to make up with them, but they won't even speak to me.

I'm praying that if my husband and I participate in the party, we can all get back together again. I need your help fast, because my sister is waiting for my answer.

— BROKENHEARTED BRIDE

DEAR BROKENHEARTED: I vote with your husband. I see no point in participating in a party for people who won't even speak to you.

Your parents appear to be very rigid and unfeeling to have cut you out of their lives as they have. You don't say how old you and your husband are, but if you're old enough to be married, you are old enough to choose your own lifestyle.

I don't deny their right to disapprove, but to have punished you as they have is inexcusable and beartless. Forget trying to "buy" your way back in their good graces. It may take a grandchild, but I'm betting they'll come around eventually.

DEAR ABBY: I am on a weight-reduction program and all my friends know how hard I've worked to lose 50 pounds, but, Abby, this one says, "Oh, just one piece of cake or pie won't hurt," then somebody else says, "Please taste this dessert — you don't have to eat the whole thing."

Abby, please tell your readers to support anyone who is trying hard to lose weight — especially for health reasons. I've had serious knee surgery, and my doctor says if I gain back the weight I've lost, my surgery will have been in vain.

Thanks for listening.

— TRYING HARD

DEAR TRYING: Many well-meaning hosts and hostesses fail to realize that "one little taste" can trigger one's craving for sugar, setting a person off on an eating binge that can last for days.

Manacled Barbie uses alias in appearance at his Lyon trial

LYON, France (AP) — Klaus Barbie was brought to court in handcuffs Monday for trial in the city where he once held sway as the Nazi Gestapo chief known as the "Butcher of Lyon."

He laughed and insisted his name is Klaus Altmann.

The dispute over the defendant's identity — he took the false name Altmann when he fled to Bolivia in 1951 with American help to avoid prosecution for war crimes — caused only a brief delay on the opening day of the trial, which is expected to last two months.

Barbie, 73, is charged with crimes against humanity. Specifically, he is accused of torturing and deporting Jews and Resistance fighters while he was an SS lieutenant heading the Gestapo from 1942-44 in Lyon, a southeastern city known as the capital of French Resistance during the German occupation.

Wearing a charcoal gray pinstripe suit and manacles, Barbie was led into the courtroom under the gaze of dozens of uniformed and plainclothes officers.

Once his hands were freed, Barbie sat behind a protective glass shield and peered around the room — a courthouse lobby lined with columns that was converted to accommodate the standing-room-only crowd of more than 800 journalists, lawyers, witnesses, court officials and spectators.

At first, Barbie looked pale after his transfer across town from his suite of isolation cells at St. Joseph prison. Later he smiled, posed for news photographers and even laughed while chatting with his lawyer, Jacques Verges, and a French-German translator.

Police and crowd-control barriers surrounded the courthouse on the banks of the Saone River. Sharpshooters kept watch from nearby buildings.

Some victims of the crimes Barbie is accused of presented flowers to Beate Klarsfeld, the German-born Nazi hunter who tracked Barbie to South America in 1972, beginning the process that brought him back for trial more than 40 years after he left Lyon.

Everyone entering the courthouse passed through metal detectors. Bags were searched.

After reading a list of Barbie's purported victims, who have official standing as "civil parties" to the criminal trial, Presiding Judge Andre Cerdini told Barbie to stand, then posed questions.

Responding in French, Barbie said he was Klaus Altmann, a Bolivian businessman with a La Paz address, born Oct. 25, 1913, in Bad Godesberg, Germany, to Niklaus and Anna Barbie.

Except for the name Altmann, the data conformed to Barbie's background.

Charles Libman, a lawyer representing some civil parties, said Barbie was giving a false identity — Altmann — and demanded the defendant acknowledge identifying himself as Barbie when returned to France in 1983 to face charges.

"I will not answer these questions," Barbie responded, switching to German and speaking through his interpreter.

Libman and Verges exchanged words. Then State Prosecutor Pierre Truche rose and said no one disputed that the man in court was the man accused.

"I understand the name of Barbie must be heavy to carry, and he might want to be rid of it," Truche said.

A jury of five men and four women was selected quickly. Six alternates were picked in case of illness, four men and two women.

The nine jurors, plus Cerdini and two associate judges, will deliberate together on the verdict at trial end. Eight votes of 12 are needed to convict.

Reading of specific charges against Barbie probably will go on into late Tuesday.

Cerdini on Monday accepted applications from lawyers for more would-be civil parties.

If Barbie is convicted, civil parties can demand money damages, but all are expected to ask only for one symbolic franc.

After World War II, Barbie worked for U.S. Army intelligence.

Giant China forest blaze rampages on

BEIJING (AP) — Fire has destroyed 740,000 acres of forest near the Soviet border in northeastern China, killing 142 people, leaving more than 50,000 homeless and wiping out three towns, according to reports Monday.

Xinhua, the official news agency, said the fire still was burning out of control. An earlier report said it had been largely contained.

Government-run radio in Heilongjiang province gave the death toll of 142 in the fire that began last Wednesday, according to sources in Beijing. It could not be confirmed because attempts to telephone the region were unsuccessful.

Official media reports earlier said 119 people were killed, 102 injured and 51,000 left homeless.

The flames destroyed Xilinji, a town of 20,000 people, on Friday and on Monday were threatening Tahe, a city of 100,000, for the second time in three days, the official reports said.

According to the official China Daily, the fire had blackened 740,000 acres of forest in the remote region and destroyed three towns and several villages.

Earlier reports said the fire was moving at the rate of about six miles an hour, fanned by strong winds.

More than 15,000 people, including 3,000 soldiers, were said to be fighting the fire.

Emigrant wipes out party win

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A city council member from the opposition Progressive Federal Party has decided to emigrate, negating a by-election victory last week that gave it control of the council for the first time.

Sam Moss, Progressive Federal leader on the 47-member council, said Mike Sutherland telephoned on Monday from Australia, where he had gone on a trip before the election, to say he would not return and would mail a letter of resignation. Sutherland has been on the council since 1982.

Moss said the party's poor showing in the white parliamentary elections was the key factor in Sutherland's decision.

"I was shaken to hear he has decided to settle in Australia," Moss said. "The results of the election and the swing to the right has made him revise his plans as he now believes he would be returning to a situation of confrontation."

In national elections Wednesday, the same day Pat Rogers won the by-election for the council seat, the anti-apartheid opposition party lost seven of its 26 elected seats in Parliament. Its share of the vote dropped to 4 percent from 19 percent in 1981.

In other developments:

• Police in the northern part of Cape province said three mixed-race children were killed during the weekend when a bomb they found in a field exploded. No details were given.

• Jon Lewis, a Briton who edits a leading journal on labor relations, has been refused permanent residence and ordered out of the country within 30 days, said a statement issued Monday by three members of the South Africa Labor Bulletin's editorial board. Lewis has been editor for three years, during which he received several temporary residence permits.

• Kaiser Matanzima, former president of the black homeland of Transkei, was banished to his rural home after threatening to take control of the government from his bother, Prime Minister George Matanzima. He formed an opposition party in the nominally independent homeland last week and accused the government of corruption.

Thatcher calls early election in bid for third straight term

LONDON (AP) — Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Monday called a general election for June 11, one year early, and launched her bid to become the first British leader ever to win three successive terms.

After weeks of speculation, the 61-year-old prime minister made the traditional pre-election journey to Buckingham Palace to ask Queen Elizabeth II to dissolve Parliament next Monday for the short campaign.

Mrs. Thatcher — who won power May 3, 1979, to become Europe's first woman prime minister — called the election a year before the end of her second five-year term, which she won in June 1983.

Opinion polls, which indicate a Tory lead of 11 points over opposition socialists, looked hopeful for Mrs. Thatcher, but less solid than in 1983.

"I hope and believe we shall win," she said. "But my goodness me, we shall work for it."

In a radio interview soon after the formal announcement from her No. 10 Downing St. office, Mrs. Thatcher indicated she already was looking to a fourth term, saying:

"We really ought to set Britain's course for the next century. . . I hope to go on and on."

MARGARET THATCHER
General vote on June 11

Share prices rocketed to new records on the London Stock Exchange in the early afternoon as crowds of sightseers, reporters and photographers clustered near Downing Street to watch Mrs. Thatcher head for the palace in an official black Jaguar. She met earlier with her full 22-member Cabinet.

Stocks calmed later but ended well up on market expectation of a third win by the right-wing leader. The Financial Times Index of 30 industrial shares, after soaring 44 points to 1703.1, finished at 1,686.9, a 28.2 point rise.

Neil Kinnock, leader of the opposition Labor Party, declared, "People want change and change they will get . . . the objectionable way she has tried to forge a one-person government in this country is widely resented."

Leaders of the centrist Social Democratic-Liberal Party- alliance said they were sure at least this time of robbing either of the big parties of an overall majority and forcing a coalition.

"We'll create a national coalition which will unite this country and allow it to prosper," said Social Democrat leader David Owen, 48.

The alliance got one-quarter of the 1983 vote but came in second or third in most constituencies and got only 23 seats in the 650-member House of Commons. Labor, with only 2 percent more votes, won 209 seats. The Tories got 397 seats on 42.4 percent of the vote. The remainder went to independents.

Parliament this week will rush through vital pieces of outstanding legislation, including parts of the annual budget, before being dissolved May 18. The new Parliament will convene June 17.

"The prime minister today asked Her Majesty the Queen to proclaim the dissolution of Parliament," the Downing Street statement said.

"Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify that she will comply with this request."

In interviews with British media, Mrs. Thatcher and Kinnock laid down their starkly opposing views of what's best for Britain.

Mrs. Thatcher reaffirmed her determination to bolster Britain's nuclear arms, introduce more curbs on labor unions, sell off more state-owned enterprises and pursue tight-spending, anti-inflationary policies.

"No change in the policies which have been so beneficial to our people, which have raised it (Britain) in the respect of the world from what it was — broke, bankrupt, unwilling to defend itself properly," she said. "We have, I think, transformed Britain."

Labor would increase state spending to pay for jobs and welfare programs to offset unemployment, which has more than doubled and now runs at 11 percent under Mrs. Thatcher.

The party also would scrap Britain's nuclear weapons and eventually close U.S. nuclear bases. But Kinnock has generally moderated the radical leftist platform on which the party went down in 1983.

"The choice is whether we are a United Kingdom or a divided kingdom," said Kinnock, 45, "whether we have a modern welfare state or a poor law state, whether we are a manufacturing or a warehouse economy."

The latest poll, by Harris, indicated the Conservatives had 44 percent support, Labor 33 and the alliance 21. A drop below 40 percent would probably mean the Conservatives would fail to get an overall majority.

Mrs. Thatcher's poll lead now compares with a 15-point lead she had going into the last election. On the day she called that election, her support stood at 47 percent but fell five points during the campaign.

Supporters credit Thatcher with halting economic slide

By MARCUS ELIASON
The Associated Press

LONDON — In going for the prize that has eluded all before her — a third straight election victory — Margaret Thatcher is riding high on a widely held perception that she has cured "the British disease" of economic decline.

The perception is heatedly challenged by the prime minister's critics, who say Britain still lags behind its competitors, and that recent economic upturns are illusions produced partly by pre-election massaging of the statistics.

They say the economy is being kept afloat by revenue from North Sea oil which will dry up before the century is out.

However, the effects are evident everywhere of what the pro-Conservative Sunday Times calls "the biggest transformation since the Industrial Revolution." And in opting for an election nearly a year ahead of schedule, this tough, combative prime minister seems to have a lot going in her favor.

By the time voters go to the polls June 11, inflation will probably be under 4 percent, compared with more than 20 percent when she took office.

Interest rates are down to 9 percent after four cuts this year.

Growth in 1987 is estimated at nearly 3 percent, the highest among major Western industrial powers.

Exports are on an upswing, and a country that 10 years ago needed an international bailout loan is now a leading creditor nation.

Perhaps most important, the jobless rate, though still high at 11 percent, shows a downward trend and could drop below the psychologically important 3 million mark by election day.

The Conservative government's "privatization" program has sold one-third of the industries nationalized by past socialist governments back into private hands, and has tripled the number of British shareholders to 8.5 million.

The ordinary Britons flocking to buy into the aircraft-engine maker Rolls-Royce, the telephone company, the gas company, British Airways and others are examples of what is sometimes called "people's capitalism."

Another is the City, London's financial district, which has blossomed into a pivotal world financial center since Mrs. Thatcher abolished currency restrictions soon after taking office.

"What the Thatcher government has done is write off large parts of the industrial base, saying that they can never be revived, and pinning hopes instead on the development of a service economy and a building-up of overseas investments, believing that the British population can earn a living within the world economy by trading services," Professor Andrew Gamble, a political scientist at Sheffield University, said at a conference in January.

But these steps, he argued, "can only support a small fraction of the British population."

Mrs. Thatcher's policies are invariably controversial, and many analysts say it is still too soon to judge them.

The opposition Labor Party argues the untrammeled atmosphere in the City has led to several major insider-trading scandals and has put little wealth in the direction of the unemployed.

Analysis

To Bill Jordan, leader of the 975,000-member Amalgamated Engineering Union, the Thatcher years have been "a disaster, and a terrible indictment against this government is that it was without purpose and even now still without direction . . . two million jobs gone, thousands of firms, good and bad alike, disappeared, and for what?"

Mrs. Thatcher stripped the trade unions of the muscle which in the 1970s enabled them regularly to cripple the country with strikes over wages and resistance to automation — a major symptom of the "British disease."

With union-curbing laws, unemployment and a sink-or-swim attitude to industry, Mrs. Thatcher has dealt the unions a staggering blow.

The coal miners, the railway workers, the print workers, have all gone up against Mrs. Thatcher and failed.

The reason is simple: a worker downing tools today faces the chance of his job disappearing. "The priority has become jobs," explains trade unionist Jordan. "Confrontation has proved to be a job destroyer."

Publisher Robert Maxwell, although a socialist with little ideological sympathy for the government, said:

"Mrs. Thatcher has indeed curbed the irresponsible power of the trade unions. She has shown that their demands for higher wages coupled with the refusal to accept technology does indeed lead to unemployment."

But Mrs. Thatcher's labor policy is not universally welcomed by big business. In the view of retired industrialist John Harvey-Jones: "The rather abrupt way the balance of power has shifted may well contain the seeds of trouble for the future."

Haiti assailant stabs wife of U.S. diplomat

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The wife of the U.S. consulate's chief political officer was stabbed Monday by a Haitian who said he wanted to pressure the United States to oust the Haitian finance minister.

Debbie Rossin, wife of Larry Rossin of the consulate in Port-au-Prince, was in satisfactory condition at the Canape Vert hospital after a one-hour operation, Dr. Max Pierre reported. He said she was stabbed about four times in the back and arm.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Jeff Lite would not disclose the name of the stabbing victim but did not deny she was Mrs. Rossin.

Radio Metropole, a private station, broadcast an interview with the assailant, who identified himself as Kenol Joseph, 36, a union leader and former employee of the recently closed Haitian American Sugar Co.

Joseph told the radio station he tried to take Mrs. Rossin hostage as a means of pressuring the U.S. government to force the resignation of Finance Minister Leslie Delatour and get the sugar company reopened.

The sugar company, Haiti's largest employer, closed last month, saying it could not compete with huge supplies of cheap sugar coming in from the Dominican Republic illegally. The two nations share the Caribbean island of Hispaniola.

Political and labor leaders have accused Delatour, a strong supporter of U.S. policy in Haiti, of sanctioning the contraband shipments of sugar.

A Finance Ministry spokeswoman said Delatour was on his way home from a two-week visit to the United States and Europe.

First debate a stalemate

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Cabinet deadlocked Monday at its first formal debate over a Middle East peace conference, and some officials predicted the 20-month-old coalition government would collapse.

A compromise on Foreign Minister Shimon Peres' plan for an international conference appeared "highly unlikely" after the four-hour meeting, said one official, speaking on condition of anonymity. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir bitterly opposes Israeli participation in such a conference.

The Cabinet's 10-member decision-making forum, known as the inner Cabinet, scheduled a second discussion on the issue for Wednesday.

The impasse appeared to diminish chances that Peres would make a trip to Washington set for Wednesday night, said his aides.

Peres already canceled a tour of Argentina and Uruguay that was scheduled after the U.S. visit so he can keep campaigning for his U.S.-backed peace plan, Peres aide Uri Savir said.

The inner Cabinet is split evenly between the two major parties and debates certain crucial issues on behalf of the full 25-member Cabinet.

BRIAN BOSWORTH
Supplemental draft?

Bosworth to NFL: I'm ready

By DAVE GOLDBERG
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Brian Bosworth, seeking to pick his NFL team rather than be picked by one he disdains, said Monday he will make himself available for the league's supplemental draft.

The All-America linebacker from Oklahoma said he preferred to play in either Los Angeles or New York. He said the Los Angeles Raiders would be his top choice because of their rebel image.

"I like their attitude," he said.

He also said that "more than half" the 28 teams would probably get letters telling them not to choose him because he wouldn't play for them, a development not unprecedented in league history.

Bosworth passed up the regular draft April 28, which was his right because he had another year of eligibility reamining at Oklahoma. When he graduated last weekend, however, he became eligible to play in the NFL.

Attired in a white linen jacket with baggy white pants and a blue-and-white striped polo shirt, and wearing the pony-tailed "Boz" hairdo he popularized, Bosworth made his announcement a long way from Norman, Oklahoma. He made it at a restaurant at the South Street Seaport, site of the old Fulton Fish Market, along with his agent, Gary Wichard, whose retention makes Bosworth ineligible to play for Oklahoma next sason.

NFL officials have not yet set a date for the next supplemental draft, several of which are usually held between the regular draft and the start of the season. It is for players who have become eligible to play in the NFL for reasons such as early graduation. League spokesman Joe Browne said the most likely date would be early June, although he didn't rule out a draft at league meetings in San Diego May 20-21.

In the past, the supplemental draft order was the same as the regular draft, in which the top team gets the first pick and the Super Bowl winner the last.

Under the system adopted for use this year, the names of each of the 28 teams will be drawn from a drum to determine the first pick.

It will be weighted so that 2-14 Tampa Bay will have 28 slips in the drum, Indianapolis 27, down to one for the Super Bowl champion Giants for a total of 406 slips.

Houston, which owns the Rams' 1988 first pick because of the trade for Jim Everett, actually would have the most slips in the drum — its own 21 and the Rams' nine. But Wichard and Bosworth hinted that Houston would be one of the teams receiving a "don't pick me" letter.

And while neither agent nor client was specific about others, Bosworth made three "no go" choices clear when he was asked his reason for passing the regular draft.

"One, the Indianapolis Colts. Two the Buffalo Bills. Three, the Green Bay Packers," he said. Those three would have been the first three in line to pick Bosworth in the regular draft since the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who had the first pick, had signed Heisman Trophy winning quarterback Vinny Testaverde of Miami.

Semifinals of playoffs may be set in 48 hours

By BILL BARNARD
The Associated Press

A 3-1 lead over Houston in a best-of-seven playoff series and a 4-1 advantage over the Rockets in the regular season haven't made Seattle SuperSonics Coach Bernie Bickerstaff overconfident.

"I still think they're a much better team," Bickerstaff said of the Rockets. "We have to continue to hustle."

Seattle can advance to the Western Conference finals with another victory over the Rockets in Houston Tuesday night. The surprising Sonics won the first two games of the series at the Summit and then split two games in Seattle.

"We're a team that can show the killer instinct," said Dale Ellis, who scored 32 points in Saturday's 117-102 victory. "We have to go to Houston and do it."

After posting a 39-43 record during the regular season, the Sonics have won six of eight playoff games.

In Sunday's games, the Golden State Warriors prevented a 3-0 sweep by Los Angeles with a 129-121 victory over the Lakers, while Boston and Detroit took 3-1 leads in the Eastern Conference semifinals with one-point victories. The Celtics edged Milwaukee 133-132 in double overtime and the Pistons tripped Atlanta 89-88.

Golden State is at the Lakers in Tuesday night's other game, and on Wednesday, it's Detroit at Atlanta and Milwaukee at Boston.

Twin Towers Ralph Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon both got into foi trouble in Houston's loss to Seattle.

"When Akeem gets in foul trouble, it's like playing on eggs," Houston Coach Bill Fitch said.

Olajuwon, who scored 33 points in the Rockets' only victory in the series, had 20 points in 27 minutes. Sampson fouled out with 18 points.

Despite the Rockets' 3-1 deficit, Olajuwon was optimistic about winning the series.

"I think we can put this thing back together," he said. "We have a good chance."

By MICHAEL VANAUSDELN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls High School high jumper Gabe Ostyn was riding high until the weekend of May 2 at the Twin Falls Classic.

Ostyn, a senior with the self-assurance of a gunslinger, was the best high jumper in the state after winning the Boise Relays with a jump of 6-feet, 6-inches (the same height he jumped at the state meet last year, good enough for third place then).

"I was pretty sure that would do it," Ostyn said. "A 6-6 jump is pretty good and I know I can do better than that. So I was already looking forward to state."

Then Highland's Richard Adams stepped in the Twin Falls leaper's jumping path.

At the classic, Adams equaled Ostyn's season best at 6-6 and with Ostyn jumping 6-4, the Ram took first place and the Bruin, for the first time all season, finished second.

The defeat took Ostyn by surprise. He had faced Adams last year, and "he wasn't that good," and even faced him at the Boise Relays, the place of Ostyn's greatest victory.

But this season, Adams "improved a lot," said Ostyn. "It (Adams' victory at the Twin Falls Classic) was a real shock."

The defeat has had a curious effect on the Bruin. With the state meet less than a week away, the only thing Ostyn is looking forward to is that meet, because Adams will be there and that Ram is the only obstacle between Ostyn and the championship.

And Adams had better beware. Considering the type of athlete Ostyn is, the state meet might turn out to be his best day as a high jumper, according to Ostyn and Twin Falls track Coach Duane Stands.

Last year, the Bruin high jumper jumped his best height against state competition. This year, it seems, that should happen again.

"The amazing thing about Gabe, I think," said Stands, "is that we haven't seen his best yet. Each year, he's done his best at state. I think you'll see him do his best in Boise."

"Yeah, that's the truth," admitted Ostyn. "I do get up more for a state meet. But last year, it was more because of the weather. If the conditions are great, I usually can do pretty well."

Come Friday and Saturday, the rest of the state will get a chance to see just how far Ostyn can leap. Stands thinks he can jump 6-8 and Ostyn knows he "can always do better. I haven't done my best yet."

There are several things Ostyn is working on to prepare for that meet. For one thing, Stands feels his high jumper needs to work on his speed, something that's always been something of a shortcoming for Ostyn. But to compensate, he has simply shortened the distance to the bar.

Despite a natural jumping ability, Ostyn never really came into his own until he began jumping farther away from the bar. Early in his career, he wouldn't jump until he could breathe on the bar, now he flies over it.

Ostyn has also changed his jump. Once the adjustment was made to move back, away from the bar, before jumping. It's only been recently that he's discovered that it's still all vertical leap.

"That's one thing I do need to work on," said Ostyn about his vertical leap. "I can do it, it's just a matter of getting it down right. I just need to work on my approach."

Also, having the experience of last year's state meet should help since "I was so psyched out before," he said. "I have more maturity now, I think."

For the most part, though, the kind of state achievement Ostyn wants to come probably will

Bruins open regionals vs. Poky; Burley, Minico meet again

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

Two months ago, Twin Falls High School began the 1987 prep baseball season in a most satisfying fashion, sweeping Region III rival Pocatello 13-4 and 17-7 in the season-opening doubleheader for both teams.

But that was then. This is now.

"They weren't in very good shape back then," recalls Brum Coach Bill Ingram, whose ballclub will open the postseason regional playoffs against the Indians at 4 p.m. today at Harmon Park. "They hadn't been outside very much yet and with Rick (Pocatello Coach Rick Parkin) teaching at the junior high it's tough for him to get together with his players to have them work in the gym. They split with (Region III regular-season champion) Highland the other day, so we know they're much improved."

The Bruins, 13-10 and the No. 2 seed in the five-team tournament that will determine the region's representatives in next week's state tournament, will play the third-seeded Indians (15-10) while fourth-seeded Minico (12-12) and fifth-seed Burley (7-18) get together for the other tournament opener in Rupert at 4:30. The Burley-Minico winner will meet top-seeded Highland (13-6) in Pocatello Wednesday afternoon. The winner of that game will play the winner of the Twin Falls-Pocatello game on Friday, with the survivor advancing to state.

In the loser's bracket, there will be games Wednesday and Friday with the consolation bracket survivor to play the Highland-Twin Falls/Poky loser for a chance to get to the state tournament through the back door by playing the third-place team from Region IV on Monday.

For the Bruins, the chief order of business today will be keeping the Indians off the bases and senior second baseman Todd Webb out of a position to hurt them with the bat. Webb, a left-handed batter, is swinging at a .560 clip at the moment.

"They lost so many kids from last year, we didn't get a real good idea of what they have when we played them before, except for the Webb kid," said Ingram. "We know they're capable of hurting us and we're going to have to play good defense."

For the Indians, the task will be finding a way to handle ace Bruin right-hander Kevin Ames (6-1).

"I thought the first time we played them we hit the ball pretty decent, but our kids have seen Ames so many times they know what to expect," said Parkin. "He throws hard and we're going to see a good pitcher. We're going to have to make contact, and I think that will be the difference in the ballgame. Whoever hits the ball (today) is going to win."

Parkin will counter on the mound today with junior Jim Gibson (1-2), a 6-foot, 44inch right-hander who beat Gem State Conference champion Skyline the other day.

"It's a gamble, but we used our No. 1 and No. 2 pitchers on Saturday (in a regular-season ending twinbill split with Highland)," Parkin said. "If we can get a good performance from Gibson (today), we'll be in real good shape for the rest of the tournament."

There will be no guessing going on in Rupert, where the Bobcats and Spartans will be playing for the fourth time this season.

"Yeah, we know just what to expect," said Burley Coach Dean Satterfield. "To beat them we're going to have to score some runs, and that can be tough against their pitching."

The Spartans may be in the best shape of any of the five Region III teams in that respect, with three sophomore right-handers that Coach Cory Bridges starts interchangeably.

"It will take three wins (for us) to go to state, and if we get good outings from each one, I think we have a chance," Bridges said.

Bridges will send Eric Miller (4-4) to the hill today to oppose senior right-hander Jared Skaggs (5-4).

Things going from comical to worse this season for Bad News Mets

By ED SHEARER
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Manager Davey Johnson doesn't claim to know the answer, but he wonders if fat salary increases and outside adulation have contributed to the New York Mets' poor start.

The defending world champions came off their fifth unsuccessful weekend of the season, in which they dropped a three-game series to the Atlanta Braves, to open a series with the Cincinnati Reds Monday night.

The Mets have lost 14 of their last 21 games to fall into fourth place in the National League East with a 13-16 record, 3½ games behind the front-running Chicago Cubs.

"I don't know if it's everybody got a raise or basking in the glory," Johnson said after watching the Mets go to 0-10 in weekend action Sunday, when Atlanta's 8-7 victory was keyed by a routine popup that fell for a double.

Darryl Strawberry, who failed to make the catch after calling off second baseman Tim Teufel, said he didn't agree with Johnson's premise on the reason for mental mistakes.

"That doesn't have anything to do with it," Strawberry said. "We just haven't played together as a team. Something good is bound to happen. We can't quit."

The Mets have had tangible problems contributing to their poor start.

Ace pitcher Dwight Gooden spent the first month in a drug rehabilitation facility and currently is working himself into shape in the minor leagues.

Bob Ojeda, another pitching star of last-year's championship season, has been bothered by tenderness in his left elbow, causing him to miss one start and limiting his performance in two others.

Ojeda was placed on the 15-day disabled list Monday.

"We just can't find any way to make anything happen," Strawberry said. "It's kind of disappointing."

Johnson said the Mets made at least four mental mistakes in Sunday's loss to the Braves, but he refused to pinpoint any of them, saying he didn't want to talk about the game.

"Anything I'd have to say about it would come in anger," Johnson said.

Buhl places second in Cross State tournament

By The Times-News

BURLEY — Caldwell claimed the championship of the Cross State Conference high school baseball tournament here Saturday, defeating Buhl 6-3 in the championship game.

The Indians gained the title game by edging Shelley 4-3 and then hammering host Burley 13-5. Caldwell defeated Mountain Home 1-0 to get into the finals.

Prep baseball

Shelley beat South Fremont 6-5 for third place and South Fremont topped Shelley 9-4 for fourth place.

In the other tournament action, Burley beat Snake River 5-4, Shelley topped Snake River 5-4 and Mountain Home outlasted South Fremont 13-12.

Senior catcher Kelly Atkinson paced the way for Buhl in the tournament by going 5-for-10 at the plate in three games with two home runs, three doubles and five RBIs.

Teammate Shane Wiggins had five hits for the day and Buhl's Derrick Walker was 4-for-7.

Jason Whitehead led Burley offensively, going 4-for-8 for the day.

The loss to Caldwell ended Buhl's winning streak at eight games. The Indians, now 11-6 in their first year of interscholastic baseball, will take part in the District 4-5-6 Class B tournament in Moreland starting Friday.

Burley dropped to 7-18 for the season with the losses and will play Minico in Rupert today in the first round of the Region III playoffs.

NHL playoffs: Oilers now within a win of finals

DETROIT (AP) — There was no question in Mike Krushelnyski's mind that Wayne Gretzky was going to pass the puck back to him, and that he would score.

The only thing Krushelnyski couldn't predict Monday night was that his goal with 1:14 remaining in the second period would stand up for a 3-2 Edmonton victory that gave the Oilers a 3-1 lead in their best-of-seven NHL semifinal series with the Detroit Red Wings.

Hockey

"This may sound weird, but giving it to Gretz and getting it back, it seemed like I'd done that before," Krushelnyski said. "I saw everything. I think the goaltender just overcompensated and I fired it in the net."

Game 5 of the Campbell Conference final will be played Wednesday night in Edmonton.

"Their big guns — Gretzky, Mark Messier and Paul Coffey — are silent, but those unsung heroes like Krushelnyski and Grant Fuhr have given them a 3-1 lead in the series," Detroit Coach Jacques Demers said. "Those guys seem to be coming through. The grinders are the ones that have put them up in this series."

Indeed, Gretzky has been held to just two assists by the underdog Red Wings.

It was a tight-checking, defensive game, as were the first three games.

ISU shares MWAC tennis title

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Lynda Bryant and Tracy Carpenter prevailed after a tiebreaker in their No. 2 doubles match as Idaho State recovered from a Weber State rally and preserved a tie in the Mountain West Conference tennis championships Sunday.

The Lady Wildcats and Lady Bengals finished with 49 points each, followed by Montana at 22½, Montana State 21, Idaho 17, Boise State 5½ and Eastern Washington at one half. Idaho State and Weber State each has won two tennis titles outright in the conference's five-year history, plus this year's tie.

Idaho State led after Saturday's play with 41 points, followed by Weber State's 38, but the Lady Wildcats won five of six singles matches to take the lead in Sunday's finals.

Weber State could have won the title outright with a victory in one of three doubles matches, but Idaho State earned the tie by winning all three.

Utah under NCAA scrutiny

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The NCAA has told the University of Utah it will conduct an official inquiry into alleged recruiting violations in the Ute football program, school officials say.

The alleged violations were discovered after a preliminary NCAA inquiry conducted earlier this year.

The NCAA allegations include a charge that former Brigham Young tackle Jason Buck made an illegal sixth recruiting to Utah and that former Ute assistant George Wheeler provided illegal transportation to prospective student-athletes.

Buck had already taken his five official campus recruiting visits when he visited Utah in December 1984. He initially denied any knowledge of wrongdoing, but later recanted and admitted to an NCAA investigator that it was his sixth trip, officials said.

Gomez upends Noah in TOC

NEW YORK (AP) — Include Andres Gomez among those with strong credentials as a favorite for the men's singles title at the French Open tennis tournament.

The Ecuadorian left-hander claimed what he called the biggest victory of his career Sunday when he defeated Yannick Noah of France 6-4, 7-6, 7-6 to win the $615,000 Tournament of Champions at the West Side Tennis Club.

"This is the most important tournament I've ever won," Gomez said. "With (West Germany's Boris) Becker, it's only logical. It's been a long time since I've beaten a top player. To win a tournament with top players is good for me."

Gomez eliminated Becker, the two-time Wimbledon champion, in the semifinals before he stopped Noah. The title also moved him back into the world's top 10 at the No. 10 spot.

Graf takes Italian Open crown

ROME (AP) — Steffi Graf, on a run of five straight tournament victories, is now aiming for her first Grand Slam title in her quest to be the world's No. 1 women's tennis player.

The 17-year-old West German won her 27th consecutive match Sunday, defeating Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina 7-5, 4-6, 6-0 to capture the Italian Open.

Graf, who moved up to No. 2 behind Martina Navratilova earlier this year, has dropped only two sets this year, both to Sabatini.

Navratilova was eliminated in the semifinals by Sabatini and has not won a tournament in 1987.

'Open' tennis for '88 Olympics

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Tennis millionaires were welcomed to the Olympics Monday, if they agree to give up some cash while chasing gold, silver and bronze.

Stars such as Boris Becker, John McEnroe and Martina Navratilova could be playing for the titles of Olympic champions next September in Seoul, when tennis returns as a medal sport for the first time in 64 years. But the world's top player, Ivan Lendl, won't be allowed in.

Ostyn

because he really doesn't get serious about his track performances until the end of the season, when everything's on the line. Before then, early in the season, one will rarely find Ostyn on the track but instead in the gym, playing his real love — basketball.

No one should be surprised. As the Bruins' leading scorer, and the Gem State Conference's third-leading scorer, he was one of the bright spots in Twin Falls High's 7-13 basketball season. Ostyn averaged more than 18 points a game despite playing forward at 6-1.

"We were a better team than our record showed," he said. "I would have done anything to have had a better season, teamwise."

Shooting — and scoring — from just about everywhere on the court, he baffled opposing defenses with his confidence and jumping ability.

"There are two things that are impressive about Gabe," said Twin Falls basketball Coach John Astorquia. "One is his jumping ability, the other is an uncanny ability to turn and go to the basket. His confidence allows him to do things he might not otherwise do. He's not afraid of anything."

The confidence factor in Ostyn came from success in both sports but it was magnified by the spotlight.

"Oh, yeah. I do much better in the spotlight," he said. "In fact, I like basketball better because there is more spotlight. With track, you're out there by yourself."

All by yourself. High jumpers are usually far away from the rest of the meet. They're over there in the far corner, jumping "at least 50 meters from anyone else," said Stands.

"High jumpers need to have a lot of self-confidence," said Stands. "It's just them and the bar, nothing else. They need to be a little cocky. Gabe has the confidence and goes far with it."

Just how far Ostyn's confidence will take him remains to be seen. The state meet will be a big factor in any plans he has for college. Both Stands and Astorquia feel Ostyn has the talent to perform at the college level.

To become a college-level basketball player, there are improvements to be made. Ballhandling, for instance. Although the senior played on the wing this year and didn't have to handle the ball as much, Ostyn would have to be a guard in college.

And then there's his lack of speed. Ostyn himself admits he's no rabbit, saying, "I'm don't have a lot of quickness." The college game is a faster game and the Twin Falls native might be able to run with them. Even though it didn't seem to cause any problems this past season.

Despite having defenders who were bigger than him, Ostyn "came through," said Astorquia. "Teams would see him and say, 'how's a slow kid like him going to score on us.' Then, they'd wonder how Gabe got 20 points. He's just a kid who can play."

M's top Clemens, take over lead in AL West

Now it's the Boston Red Sox's turn to be unhappy with the deal.

Bankhead allowed five hits and two earned runs in seven innings and Kingery drove in two runs and set up another Monday night, leading the Mariners to a 4-3 over Roger Clemens and the Red Sox.

With their fourth consecutive victory, matching the club's 1986 high, the Mariners improved their record to 18-14 and moved past Kansas City into first place in the American League West. Seattle is off to its best start in team history.

"I guess a lot of people were unhappy with the trade, but Mike and I didn't think anything about it," Bankhead said after improving his record to 5-2 with relief help from Bill Wilkinson and Edwin Nunez. "We're just a couple of young guys still learning and happy to be here. We're trying to do our jobs and we're having fun."

Clemens, 2-3, pitched a complete game, allowing eight hits with two walks and five strikeouts.

TORONTO (AP) — George Bell and Cecil Fielder each homered and drove in two runs, backing Jimmy Key's four-hit pitching Monday night as Toronto Blue Jays defeated the Kansas City Royals 4-0.

Key, beaten by Kansas City 6-3 last week, struck out seven and walked none to improve his record to 5-2. It was Toronto's first shutout of the season and Key's second complete game.

Charlie Leibrandt, 4-2, lost for the first time at Exhibition Stadium after four straight victories. He gave up seven hits and struck out seven in his first complete game.

NY Yankees 3

NEW YORK (AP) — Slugger Dave Winfield and light-hitting Lenn Sakata hit sixth-inning homers for the tying and go-ahead runs as the New York Yankees beat the Chicago White Sox 3-2 Monday night behind Rick Rhoden's strong pitching.

Rhoden, 4-3, gave up eight hits in 7⅔ innings and Dave Righetti finished for his eighth save. The loss was Chicago's fifth straight.

Floyd Bannister, 2-3, who was knocked out by the Yankees in the third inning last Wednesday, allowed an unearned run and four hits over the first five innings. But Winfield led off the sixth with his sixth home run of the season and 311th of his career.

Two outs later, Sakata, a lifetime .228 hitter, hit his second homer, only the 25th of his 7½-year major-league career. Sakata has seven hits in 16 at-bats since he has been platooning at third base with slump-ridden Mike Pagliarulo.

The home runs were the 13th and 14th allowed by Chicago pitchers in the last four games.

Cincinnati 12
NY Mets 2

CINCINNATI (AP) — Eric Davis hit a towering two-run homer, his major league-leading 14th, sparking a four-run fifth inning Monday night as the Cincinnati Reds routed the reeling New York Mets 12-2.

The Reds had 18 hits, including a double and three singles each for Dave Parker, who broke an 0-for-17 slump, and Bo Diaz. Davis had four RBI, raising his major-league high to 36.

The defending world champions have lost their last four games and 14 of their last 21 to tumble to 13-16. New York was 22-7 at the same point a year ago.

Minnesota 10
Baltimore 4

BALTIMORE (AP) — Tom Nieto hit a three-run homer and Tom Brunansky and Kent Hrbek each connected for two-run shots as the Minnesota Twins rapped a season-high 14 hits and pounded the Baltimore Orioles 10-4 Monday night.

Nieto, obtained in a trade with Montreal, hit his first American League homer in the second inning following singles by Mark Davidson and Steve Lombardozzi.

Brunansky's fifth homer came in the third after Gary Gaetti walked, and finished Scott McGregor, 1-5. Newman followed with a triple and scored on Dan Gladden's sacrifice fly to make it 7-1. Brunansky added an RBI single in the ninth.

Baseball

Philadelphia 7
Houston 6

HOUSTON (AP) — Juan Samuel drove in five runs with a pair of homers, including a three-run home run in the eighth inning, as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Houston Astros 7-6 Monday night.

With Philadelphia trailing 5-3 in the eighth, Milt Thompson reached on a forceout and Jeff Stone got a bunt single before Samuel hit his fourth home run over the right field fence off reliever Larry Andersen, 3-2.

Texas 6
Cleveland 3

CLEVELAND (AP) — Larry Parrish homered, doubled and singled, driving in three runs, and the Texas Rangers ended a nine-game road losing streak Monday night with a 6-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians in a game called because of rain after five innings.

The Rangers, only 2-10 on the road this season, used a four-run second inning to spoil Phil Niekro's bid for his 314th career win. With 313 victories, Niekro, 2-2, remains in 12th place on the all-time list, one behind Gaylord Perry.

The loss was Cleveland's seventh in eight games.

Ron Meridith, 1-0, got the victory in relief, striking out the only batter he faced following an 18-minute rain delay in the fourth inning. Mike Loynd pitched a scoreless fifth inning for his first save.

Montreal 7
Atlanta 6

MONTREAL (AP) — Tim Wallach's home run with one out in the 10th inning gave the Montreal Expos a 7-6 victory over the Atlanta Braves Monday night.

Wallach hit a 2-0 pitch off Jim Acker, 0-2, into the left-field seats for his fifth home run of the season.

Lary Sorensen, 2-1, was the winner as Montreal won for the seventh time in nine starts and reached the .500 level for the first time this season at 15-15. Atlanta rallied from a 6-2 deficit, tying the game in the ninth as Ken Oberkfell singled, went to second on reliever Andy McGaffigan's throwing error on a pickoff attempt, and scored when Graig Nettles doubled to center field.

Herm Winningham hit a three-run triple and Andres Galarraga added a two-run homer as Montreal built its lead.

California 5
Detroit 1

DETROIT (AP) — Devon White's run-scoring single broke a seventh-inning tie and Mike Witt and De-Wyane Buice combined to scatter 11 hits Monday night as the California Angels defeated the Detroit Tigers 5-1 in a rain-delayed game.

With the score 1-1, McLemore singled with one out in the seventh off Walt Terrell, 2-4. McLemore moved to third on a single by Brian Downing and scored on White's hit over shortstop Alan Trammell.

The Angels added three runs in the ninth.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

BOBBY WOLFF

"Somehow life doesn't always pay off to those who are most insistent."
— Max Lerner.

Against no-trump games, it's often best for the defense to keep hammering at the same suit. There are exceptions, however, and today's hand offers a good example.

East puts up his spade king at trick one and South correctly ducks. When East now returns the spade 10 and South ducks once again, it's up to West to make a fine play. What is likely to happen if East's 10 is allowed to win?

East will probably hammer away at spades, forcing South to win his ace. Both club finesses then lose to East, but South still has time to develop nine winners.

At trick two, West should overtake East's spade 10 and shift to the heart jack. West knows that he has no hope of an entry and that it would be futile to continue in spades. South must win the heart shift and attack on clubs; limiting his total to a maximum of eight tricks when both club honors are held by East.

If West allows East's spade 10 to hold at trick two, should East find the heart switch anyway? Perhaps there is an argument for that action. However, why should West expect his partner to defend like a genius when he has a much easier play to make himself?

Volatility puts stocks into late-day nosedive

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Prices went into a nosedive in late trading on Wall Street Monday, falling victim to the volatility that has pummeled the financial markets recently.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks closed down 15.00 points at 2,307.30.

The Dow Jones average was up about 40 points for much of the session before the market suffered what Jack Solomon, an analyst at Bear Stears & Co., called "a straight-line collapse" in the last hour.

"Volatility is built into the structure of the market right now," Solomon said, predicting that the uncertainty would continue.

Analysts said Wall Street took its strength from the dollar, which was up against most foreign currencies, and then lost ground because of a sharp drop in the government bond market.

In recent weeks the stock market has tied its fortunes to those of the dollar and Treasury bonds. The dollar's steep decline has raised fears of interest rate hikes in both the bond and stock markets.

The analysts said bonds fell Monday — in spite of the dollar's rise — in reaction to a jump in commodity prices that traders interpreted as a harbinger of higher inflation.

Stocks did not immediately follow the lead of bonds, but "the market couldn't stand staring at the bond drop any longer," Solomon said.

Indicative of the sharp drop was IBM, which was trading up 3⅛ at mid-afternoon but then closed down ¾ at 163.

Leading the NYSE most active list was Texaco, which rose 2½ to 38. Several large blocks of Texaco stock — including two blocks of 1 million shares each — changed hands.

Texaco also was up sharply on Friday amid rumors of an impending settlement between the oil company and Pennzoil Co., which has won a $10 billion judgment against Texaco. The company denied the rumors.

There also were rumors that Australian financier Robert Holmes a Court was accumulating Texaco shares, but analysts said they believed Holmes a Court was buying the stock for investment purposes and not to attempt a takeover.

Among the big gainers Monday were Dupont, which parked up [illegible] to close at [illegible], Exxon, which rose [illegible] to [illegible], Atlantic Richfield, which was up [illegible] to [illegible], and Compaq Computer, up [illegible] to [illegible].

Among the big losers were Eli Lilly, which tumbled 4 to [illegible], ITT, which fell [illegible] to 58, Ford Motor, which slipped [illegible] to [illegible] and Unisys, which dropped [illegible] to [illegible].

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled [illegible] million shares.

The NYSE's composite index fell [illegible] to [illegible].

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell [illegible] to [illegible], and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 1.30 to 291.[illegible].

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 0.70 to [illegible]. The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 422.06, down 1.05.

Gourmet fowl labeled 'meat of kings'

Town rules the roost as squab capital

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times

MODESTO, Calif. — "Squab is the Cadillac of fowl, the meat of kings," Robert Shipley opines.

"Egyptian Pharaohs ate squab. So did the Ming Dynasty emperors of China and the royal families of medieval Europe."

And, without much notice, this Central California city 80 miles east of San Francisco has become America's squab capital. The 48 members of the Modesto-based Squab Producers of California cooperative sold 400,000 young pigeons last year under the King Cal label, or about 36 percent of the nation's output. The cooperative grossed $2.5 million last year, including $1.6 million worth of squabs and $900,000 of pheasants, ducks and chukar (partridge).

Still, says Shipley, the cooperative's general manager, most Americans know almost nothing about the squab, and 90 percent of the public has never tried it.

"Squab isn't found in your corner grocery store or nearby supermarket. A few gourmet shops may feature it as a specialty item, but you really have to look for it," he says.

Nearly half of the pigeons grown here are sold to markets and restaurants featuring Chinese food. Most of the rest go to gourmet or "white tablecloth" restaurants. About 10 percent are exported.

His birds are most definitely not park pigeons, insists Shipley, 36. Those birds are "tough are nails," he says, while squab meat melts in your mouth.

Squab are 28- to 30-day-old broad-breasted nestling pigeons with limited muscle development because they have never flown. Dressed out, they weigh 14 to 16 ounces each.

Nearly all of California's squab producers are in the San Joaquin Valley. Most are small operators with as few as 200 pairs of breeders; the largest own 2,500 pairs.

The cooperative pays its growers $2.50 to $3 for each live bird and processes them at a Modesto plant that employs 22. At retail, Squab fetches $6 a pound.

"This is a farm product with remarkable stability, unlike poultry, livestock and most crops in recent years," noted Chester Blocher, 75, a member of the cooperative for 20 years with his son-in-law, Ron Gish, 55.

Breeding squab pairs occupy roost on Blocher-Gish farm

The men have 87 pigeon lofts on their Modesto farm with 15 pairs of breeders in each loft. They gross more than $30,000 a year from their part-time squab business.

"This is an excellent money crop. We put in about 10 hours a week with the pigeons, that's it," Blocher says.

Some pairs produce as many as 17 young a year, Gish says, and average yearly output per pair at the farm is 13 nestling pigeons.

"They mate for life and average five years as productive birds," Gish explains. "These pigeons are remarkable in many ways. Male and female take turns sitting on the eggs and feeding the young."

Shipley claims that demand far exceeds supply.

"It is better that way. It keeps the price up. This is a very healthy industry."

The Modesto cooperative is the only one of its kind in the United States, he says, and its success has been noticed elsewhere.

The Chinese, he says, have been seeking to purchase thousands of breeders from the California cooperative to upgrade their stock.

"We have turned them down because we don't have enough breeders of our own to meet the demand of Americans."

Cooper quits as bank chief

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Thomas A. Cooper resigned Monday as president and chief operating officer of BankAmerica Corp. in the wake of a power struggle with BankAmerica Corp. chairman A.W. Clausen, although Cooper termed the parting a friendly one.

Clausen will assume Cooper's responsibilities and no successor to the positions of president and chief operating officer is planned, according to a statement by the nation's second-largest bank holding company.

Cooper's resignation had been predicted by more than a week ago by industry analysts, who credited him with guiding the banking giant during the final days of former BankAmerica chairman Samuel Armacost.

Armacost resigned in October 1986. Clausen at that time resumed the role of BankAmerica chairman he held in the 1970s and began building an inner circle of executives from other banks or friends from his first tenure.

Clausen took away a key part of Cooper's responsibilities last month when he named Richard M. Rosenberg, former president of BankAmerica's Seattle-based Seafirst Corp. unit, to be a vice-chairman and chief of the company's California retail operation.

Rosenberg reported directly to Clausen.

Consumer groups proposing reforms in home equity loans

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Home equity loans, a new-found source of credit for thousands of homeowners, are financial land mines that could explode in the face of an unwary borrower, two consumer organizations charged Monday.

Consumers Union and the Consumer Federation of America said surveys of banks offering the newly popular form of credit show they are being heavily promoted, but usually without disclosing pitfalls that could cost the borrower his home.

Some banks write contracts that allow changes in interest rates at the bank's whim, they said, without limits on how often or how much. True rates often are hidden in advertising by "teaser" rates that are good for only 90 days or so.

Some banks allow borrowers to make interest-only payments for an indefinite period, then hit the homeowner with a balloon payment for the full outstanding balance — an amount that can be $20,000 or more.

Some charge initial fees, ranging as high as $2,000, plus annual fees ranging from $15 to $100, that can wipe out the tax advantages of equity loans.

And few make real efforts to fully disclose their rates and terms to prospective customers, the consumer groups said.

"Home equity loans are land mines that could be triggered by income loss, higher interest rates or a large balloon payment," said Stephen Brobeck, executive director of the Consumer Federation of America. "The resulting explosion could destroy one's home."

The groups called on Congress to put caps on how often and how much the interest rate on variable rate home equity loans can be raised; to eliminate balloon payments, interest-only payments, payment terms that allow the outstanding balance to get bigger rather than smaller and other risky payment features.

Generic certificate deadline now June 1

WASHINGTON (AP) — A May 15 deadline for cash redemption of so-called generic certificates that expired in the first three months of 1987 has been extended to June 1, the Agriculture Department said Monday.

The opportunity for cash redemption was announced on April 6 and applies only to original holders of the certificates who take them to the county office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service where first issued.

Richard W. Goldberg, deputy undersecretary for international affairs and commodity programs, said the additional time was granted because "some original holders may not have been aware of the previous announcement."

Normally, until they expire, the certificates can be redeemed at face value for surplus commodities owned by the department's Commodity Credit Corp., or sold for cash to others. The special window for expired certificates, however, allows them only to be redeemed by CCC for cash payment.

Goldberg said payments will equal the certificate's face value minus 15 percent for handling and another 4.3 percent required by the balanced-budget act of 1985, the Gramm-Rudman law.

Nearly $5.9 billion worth of generic certificates were issued from April 1986 through December, mostly as deficiency payments and diversion payments to farmers for participating in commodity programs.

Officials have said they did not know the dollar value of expired certificates but estimated that their total was small, perhaps a fraction of 1 percent of all certificates issued.

Here are some ways to save on taxes despite new laws

Sylvia Porter

First in a series

The reason: to justify new legislation intended to close those loopholes. Even more important to you, the Congressional Reports are a gold mine of tax-saving information.

"I don't remember a year," says Eli J. Warach, chief consulting editor of Prentice Hall Information Services, "that I haven't found a real tax-saving gem hidden away deep in the heart of some report, regulation or law. The government unearths some real tax treasures for the nation's taxpayers."

The trick is to digest these government reports and turn them into big tax savings for you. That's one of the things Warach and I do in this series starting today.

A new report just came out that highlights items that you may have been missing out on, by estimating breaks in the big new tax reform law and other laws on the books. These are the breaks that taxpayers use to get the biggest savings. You should check off each one to be sure that you're getting your fair share.

Here are the committee's top 20 tax savers for individuals in 1988. This means YOUR tax savings.

1) No current tax on employer's contributions to retirement plans, and the earnings also grow tax free. This remains one of the top tax shelters available to the average American employee.

2) The deduction for mortgage interest on your principal residence and a second residence. As I've pointed out before, you can, with a little ingenuity, get a variety of tax breaks.

3) Medical insurance and medical expenses paid by employer. These continue to be giant dollar savers.

4) The writeoff for state and local income taxes and personal property taxes. These still are fully deductible — despite crackdowns on sales taxes and other areas.

5) Partial or total tax exemption for Social Security benefits. As you know, Social Security benefits are classed as tax free. However, above a certain income, some part (no more than half) become subject to tax.

6) The deduction for charitable contributions. This one will shock many of you — but it is what the government says: the sixth biggest tax saver!

7) Tax-sheltered Individual Retirement Accounts. Under the new rules, some IRAs are deductible while others (although not deductible) continue to grow tax-deferred.

8) Real estate property tax deduction for owner-occupied homes. That's another break for homeowners.

9) Tax-free interest from municipal bonds. No surprise. Remember, if and when you buy "munis," tell the broker you want fully tax-exempts — and ask how much the broker charges.

10) Tax-deferred profit on home sale. The famous rollover where you sell one home and buy another. If the home you buy has a sales tag as big as the one you sell — no current tax.

11) Accelerated depreciation on business equipment.

12) The exclusion from tax for Medicare benefits. There's no tax on the money that Medicare pays for you or reimburses you.

13) The deduction for investment interest in excess of investment income. This refers to the phase-in. The deduction gets lower year after year.

14) The tax-free buildup in the cash-value of life insurance and annuities. This is a big and important one. You protect your loved ones or get the cash out tax free.

15) The tax-free step-up in basis on inherited property. Example: Bob pays $10 a share for 300 shares of stock. Some 15 years later, at his death, the stock is worth $200 a share ($60,000). His heirs sell for $60,000 — no tax. And that's true despite the fact that he paid only $3,000.

16) Tax-free employer-paid fringe benefits (e.g., dependent-care plans). As I keep saying, get as many fringe benefits as you can. (Read more on "dependent care" in one of the columns in this series.)

17) Tax credit for qualified child-care expenses. Again, it's worth a lot. I will report on this later.

18) Accelerated depreciation on real estate (other than rental housing).

19) The up-to-$25,000 loss writeoff for owners of rental property. If you materially participate in the management of the property, you can use up to $25,000 of excess losses.

20) The exclusion from tax for worker's compensation.

Important: This is the list for preparing your tax return in 1988. The order will change again next year. At the least, the excess deduction for investment interest will eventually be eliminated from the list since the Tax Reform Act phases this deduction out.

Sylvia Porter writes on matters of interest to consumers.

Clear-cut decisions head list of major management tools

John Cunniff

NEW YORK — In almost any survey of what constitutes good management, you are likely to find prominently mentioned the ability to make clear-cut decisions when needed.

There is, in fact, a management school that believes any decision is better than none, because to decide — correctly or incorrectly — at least rearranges elements of the problem and provides another chance to resolve it.

It is not unusual, therefore, to hear that the ability to make crisp decisions was rated first in importance in a study of 6,500 managers in more than 100 companies, many of them large, blue-chip corporations.

However, this study employed the rarely used technique of not asking the managers themselves for their opinions, but instead asking their associates and subordinates. And in this study, at least three associates or subordinates were asked to rate each of the managers involved.

As the managers entered a training course at Harbridge House, a Boston-based firm, the associates-subordinates were asked how important it was to them that the manager-student employ certain management practices.

They also were asked how well, in their estimation, the manager performed these practices.

It was from a mathematical distillation of these answers that Harbridge ranked "making clear-cut decisions when needed" as the most important of 10 management practices.

And it was from these evaluations they concluded that only 20 percent of the managers performed "very well" on any given practice.

True, 80 percent of the managers performed "to at least a moderate level" in most of the categories. But moderate, you may fairly conclude, is hardly what should be expected of those entrusted with the big decisions.

Said the Harbridge analysts: "There is plenty of room for managers to improve their effectiveness," a comment likely to be seconded by those who work for them.

Ranked second in managerial importance was "getting to the heart of problems rather than dealing with less important issues," a finding that seems to show up in all such studies.

In fact, a common complaint about managers, and often about salespeople, is that they spend too much of their time on matters having relatively little importance to the success of their efforts.

The other "most important practices for effective management:"

- Following up on important issues and actions.
- "Leveling" with individuals and describing how you feel about their performance.
- Being open and candid in your dealings with the group rather than being reserved and cautious.
- Clarifying who is responsible for what within the group.
- Involving subordinates in establishing goals and standards that are set for their jobs.
- Discussing performance difficulties with subordinates and soliciting suggestions for overcoming them.
- Demonstrating personal commitment to achieving goals.
- Establishing and communicating goals for the group as a whole.

Reflecting on this list, many readers are likely to make an analysis of their own that could be right on the mark:

Equity

and to require full disclosure of terms.

Many of the charges were disputed by the banking industry, which said there is no evidence the loans are being abused by either banks or consumers.

Delinquency rates are low, said Fritz Elmendorf of the Consumer Bankers Association, and industry surveys show consumers are properly limiting their use of equity loans to extraordinary purposes, such as a college tuition or unexpected medical expenses.

"It is an extremely convenient product, and we think that's what makes it attractive," Elmendorf said. "We would be opposed to legislation that would restrict that convenience." He said, for example, that consumers sometimes want balloon payments.

But Elmendorf said the bankers agree with the consumer groups on several points, including opposition to "interest-only" payment plans and the need for full disclosure of lending terms. The American Bankers Association also has urged its members to fully disclose terms.

Home equity loans are, in effect, second mortgages. They allow the borrower to pledge the equity in his home to back a credit line.

They are increasingly popular because interest on a real estate loan generally is deductible on federal tax returns, while interest on other loans is losing its tax-deductible status under the new tax law.

But the equity loans present a risk because their security is the home. If the borrower is unable to meet his obligation, the bank can foreclose on the house just as if the loan were a regular mortgage.

Home equity is the largest single source of savings for most middle-income Americans, the consumer groups noted. But home equity loans tempt many to fritter away their savings for non-essentials, with ads promoting their use for vacations or cars.

"Banks are heavily promoting these credit lines by promising the 'good life' with easy repayment terms," said Michelle Meier, a Consumers Union attorney. "But instead, they'll keep consumers in a perpetual state of debt and eat away at the major source of consumer savings, the equity in the home."

A study of 46 banks in 14 large cities by the Consumer Federation found that 12 permitted interest-only payments for indefinite periods and 33 allowed for balloon payments. Of the latter number, 21 retained the right to require payment of the full balance at any time. None of the 33 banks mentioned the possibility of balloon payments in their ads.

A Consumers Union study of 45 banks — 15 each in New York, Washington and San Francisco — found that 93 percent had no cap on interest rate changes. Most linked interest rate changes to some index, but two retained the right to change the rate at will and seven linked changes to changes in their own prime rate.

Several of the banks wrote contracts that allowed the bank to change the terms of the loan at will and apply the new terms retroactively, Consumers Union said.

Chance to break into national market

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — An Idaho Falls computer management firm is hoping to break into the big time this summer.

The company has found a software niche that could mean rapid expansion into a national market, its president says.

Computer Management Center Inc. provides computer timeshare service for more than 100 eastern Idaho businesses. Now it hopes to nationally market its accounting software designed for rehabilitation centers.

Over the past three years, the 19-year-old firm's computer programmers and accountants developed the software for a rehabilitation center client in eastern Idaho, said John Griffith, CMC president.

The company displayed its software at rehabilitation conventions recently, and it drew interest from center officials from various parts of the country, Griffith said.

"We talked with fairly sophisticated users who are impressed with our software," he said, adding that a number were sending representatives to Idaho Falls to examine the software this spring.

Griffith said his staff did not realize the potential for the software until representatives from a major computer firm, Digital Equipment Co., recognized it had unlimited growth prospects.

CMC develops and modifies software for use on Digital computers. A Digital minicomputer at CMC's headquarters runs the software for timeshare clients. CMC also sells Digital computers to clients as part of a software-hardware package.

Once Digital realized CMC has a unique software package, it asked CMC to convert its rehabilitation software for use on Digital's latest minicomputer, the VAX and PDP-11 series equipment.

Griffith said it's a case of his company being in the right place at the right time.

"There's a lack of good software for these sophisticated machines, and we're trying to fill that need," Griffith said. In the area of rehabilitation software, "nothing has advanced as far as ours. We're the new kid on the block."

Dwight Whittaker, executive director of Development Workshop in Idaho Falls, said CMC has created software for its particular needs in the areas of payroll, accounts payable and receivable, general ledger and inventory control.

"As we got larger, they modified the software and incorporated all our needs," Whittaker said.

CMC also is working with Development Workshop to create software for monitoring the workshop's effectiveness in rehabilitating clients, Whittaker said.

Development Workshop provides rehabilitation services for 357 physically or mentally disabled adults.

CMC began as a computer applications and studies subsidiary of Bingham Mechanical in Idaho Falls. It eventually branched out on its own as a timeshare computer management firm, and has done over $1 million a year in business the past few years, Griffith said. CMC employs 14 computer programmers, technicians and accountants.

Chrysler splits off parts subsidiary

TROY, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp. on Monday became the first major U.S. automaker to convert its parts-making business into a wholly owned subsidiary competing against outside sources for Chrysler business.

The new company, called Acustar Inc., will not issue a stock offering immediately but may later, said Acustar Chairman Robert Lutz, a Chrysler executive vice president, and President Lee Runk.

"For the past two years, we have been designing, producing and selling many components on a worldwide basis -- including car and truck transmissions, drive train systems and other products, electronics parts and automotive glass -- on competitive bids to all other manufacturers as well as to Chrysler," said Runk.

"Our separation from Chrysler makes it easier for us to form proprietary joint ventures to develop new technology and new product ventures," he said.

As Chrysler's components division, Acustar had $2.8 billion in 1986 sales, including $2.3 billion, or 80 percent, to Chrysler, and $500 million to outside buyers.

Chrysler split off parts-making operations, except for engine-building, into a separate division in 1985, which like Acustar competed for Chrysler business and led to Acustar's formation. "No nepotism, no favorite sons," said Lutz, calling Acustar a "bureaucracy-buster."

Rates slide at T-bill sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities, after two weeks of increases, declined in Monday's auctions with three-month bills dropping to the lowest level since February.

The Treasury Department sold $6.4 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.47 percent, down from 5.81 percent last week. Another $6.4 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.74 percent, down from 6.16 percent last week.

The rates were the lowest since three-month bills sold for 5.40 percent on Feb. 23 and six-month bills averaged 5.63 percent on April 6.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 5.64 percent for three-month bills with a $10,000 bill selling for $9,861.70 and 6.01 percent for six-month bills selling for $9,709.80.

In a separate report, the Federal Reserve said Monday that the average yield for one-year Treasury bills, the most popular index for making changes in adjustable rate home mortgages, rose to 6.88 percent last week after averaging 6.76 percent the week before.

Publishing firm tops list of black business

NEW YORK (AP) — Johnson Publishing Co. Inc., parent of Ebony and Jet magazines, was the nation's biggest black-owned business in 1986 for the fourth year in a row, Black Enterprise magazine reported Tuesday.

Companies on the magazine's annual listing of the top 100 black-owned U.S. businesses grossed a combined $3.27 billion in sales, an 11.2 percent increase over 1985's aggregate $2.94 billion, the magazine said. It was the first time the total topped $3 billion, it added.

The magazine said automobile dealerships accounted for 41 percent of the top-100's combined revenue, with 53 slots on the list.

Chicago-based Johnson Publishing, which also has interests in broadcasting, TV production and cosmetics, led the 100 companies with $173.5 million in 1986 sales, up from $154.86 million.

Motown Industries, the Los Angeles-based entertainment firm, was second with $152.39 million in sales, followed by Atlanta-based H.J. Russell & Co. — formerly known as H.J. Russell Construction Inc. — at $132 million.

Philadelphia Coca-Cola Bottling Co. Inc. was fourth, at $110 million, and Soft Sheen Products, Inc., a Chicago hair-care products manufacturer, was fifth at $85 million, said Black Enterprise.

The rest of the top 10 companies were:

TLC Group Inc., with interests in publishing and home-sewing products, sales of $63 million; Systems Management American Corp., a Norfolk, Va., computer systems integration company, $62 million; Decatur, Ga.-based Thacker Organization, a construction and engineering firm, $57.2 million; Lawson National Distribution Co. of Chicago, which markets transit vehicles, $52.1 million, and Porterfield Wilson Pontiac-GMC Truck-Mazda, Inc. of Detroit, $49.7 million.

'Lost soul' Hasenfus believes U.S. was his true employer

MARINETTE, Wis. (AP) — Eugene Hasenfus, the mercenary whose capture in Nicaragua last October exposed a private network aiding the Contra rebels, says he feels like a "lost soul," abandoned by his former employers and his government.

Hasenfus still insists that he and the dozen other Americans in the air resupply network always were "under the direct impression that they were working for the U.S. government."

Unemployed and in debt, Hasenfus broke his silence while the country tuned in on the congressional Iran-Contra hearings. He finds himself far from the center of attention, a footnote to an unfolding story.

Sitting in his living room overlooking Lake Michigan, Hasenfus, 46, said in an interview with The Associated Press this past week that he was "demoralized a little bit, down in the dumps for the way I have been neglected."

"I feel like a lost soul that has been forgotten and nobody gives a damn about me," he said. "My government doesn't care."

Since coming home in December, Hasenfus has declined speaking engagements and other appearances, spending most of his time at his brick rambler about five miles outside this town of 12,000 in northeastern Wisconsin.

Hasenfus said he caught snippets of Richard V. Secord's testimony on television. The retired Air Force major general, the first witness in the Iran-Contra hearings, testified that he acted on the request of fired White House aide Oliver L. North in establishing the private air supply operation that ultimately employed Hasenfus.

His impression that he was working for the U.S. government when he flew supply missions to the Contras as a cargo handler stemmed in part from conversations with William J. Cooper, the pilot who recruited him. The two had been friends for more than 20 years, ever since they worked in Southeast Asia for Air America, a defunct CIA front.

"It's exactly as it was with Air America, just a different time, a different location," Hasenfus quoted Cooper as saying.

"That puts us right back to the U.S. government, the CIA," Hasenfus said. "This was strictly for our government, which has to put a stop somewhere to communist aggression."

Cooper and Wallace B. Sawyer, his co-pilot, were killed last Oct. 5 when their C-123K plane was downed by a missile. Hasenfus parachuted safely and wandered around the jungle for 24 hours before Sandinista soldiers seized him.

Hasenfus doesn't want to talk about his day at large. After his capture, he was convicted by a tribunal in Managua but pardoned in a Christmas gesture and freed last Dec. 18.

Eugene Hasenfus, wife Sally living primarily on hope

Sometimes, he and his wife, Sally, who is helping him write his story, stop when they come to a painful part. And Hasenfus tenses up when he hears Spanish, a language that evokes images of his 10 weeks in jail. The Hasenfuses hope to sign a contract for a book, television miniseries or movies.

Hasenfus said he was particularly interested in Secord's revelation that about $8 million remains in Swiss bank accounts. The money represents profits generated by the sale of weapons to Iran and other sources.

The air crews thought that money for the resupply project came through "slot funds," or black money generated by government businesses, Hasenfus said. They "never dreamed" they were supported by weapons sales to Iran, he said.

Foremost on his mind is money still owed him. As a cargo "kicker," Hasenfus's contract with a shadowy company named Corporate Air Services Inc., called for him to receive $3,000 a month and a $750 bonus for each of the 10 flights he made into Nicaragua.

He said he is owed money from the three months he spent in Central America.

The family's debts total thousands of dollars, stemming from Sally's three trips to Nicaragua, a lack of income since last fall and legal bills, he said. The couple has three children, ages 12, 10 and 7.

"We're hoping that this is resolved and the people that I was employed with stand behind what they have said and they'll take care of these expenses," Hasenfus said.

"We have no income left at all," he said. "We're living on a hope and a prayer."

Hasenfus was a structural iron worker before he went to Central America last July, but he said the job market is tight. Mrs. Hasenfus, a real estate agent, said she lost clients because of her husband's ordeal and has not returned to work since his release.

Providing details on his employment in Central America, Hasenfus said Cooper worked for Robert Dutton. Secord's business partner. Hasenfus said he has talked with Dutton, but he was not questioned by either the CIA or State Department. House investigators quizzed him, but he has not been called before independent counsel Lawrence Walsh.

One problem Hasenfus has in making a claim is his lack of papers. He said he never received a copy of the contract he signed with Corporate Air Services.

Summing up his experiences over the past year, he said: "The whole thing has been a loser."

McFarlane clash with Regan outlined in series of notes

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the administration's arms deal with Iran began unraveling last November, an angry Robert C. McFarlane accused then White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan of trying to lay "the entire problem at my feet" and threatened to sue him.

McFarlane, the former national security adviser, complained bitterly about Regan in an exchange of notes with John Poindexter, his successor who resigned a few weeks later amid disclosures that proceeds from the arms sales went for military aid to the Nicraguan Contra rebels.

The notes were among internal White House documents released by the congressional investigative committees during McFarlane's testimony Monday. They provided a glimpse at the internal White House discord that had already led to McFarlane's resignation.

The first note, from McFarlane to Poindexter, came just days after word of the arms sales was published by a Middle East magazine the first weekend in November 1986.

In it McFarlane said he had been told Regan had blamed him during a "background" interview with reporters for weekly news magazines. Such an interview means remarks can be used without attributing them by name to the speaker.

"I returned today to find that Don Regan has backgrounded the weeklies and laid the entire problem at my feet; my idea, my management, a strict arms for hostages deal..." McFarlane complained.

McFarlane said friends were telling him that he was "being lined out to dry by Don Regan."

"I must tell you that if this is true, I will be quite mad. This will be the second lie Don Regan has sowed against my character and I won't stand for it," he said.

McFarlane provided a brief chronology of events and insisted he had opposed a direct arms-for-hostages deal. He said if Regan has been blaming it on him "it will be cause for a libel suit by me."

McFarlane said he was not commenting in public in order to protect Iranian speaker Hashemi Ali Rafsanjani and others. "But I won't tolerate lies from Don Regan."

Poindexter replied that he would check with Regan but added: "I frankly doubt that he did what you suggest. I had breakfast with him this morning and he agreed that he would keep his mouth shut."

Poindexter also added, "I wish everybody would calm down a bit on this. We have a damn good story to tell when we are ready."

U.S. appeals X-car ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Monday it will appeal a federal judge's decision against requiring the recall of 1.1 million 1980 General Motors X-body automobiles because of alleged braking problems.

The Justice Department, in a notice to the U.S. District Court, said it will file formal motions with the U.S. Court of Appeals shortly, seeking to have the ruling in favor of General Motors overturned.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson last month threw out the government suit which alleged GM's 1980 front-wheel drive X-body cars contained a safety defect linked to 1,417 accidents, 18 deaths and 400 injuries.

The suit on behalf of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration had asked that GM be fined $4 million and that it be ordered to recall the cars which were sold as the Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Buick Skylark and Oldsmobile Omega.

But Jackson in his April 14 ruling sided with the manufacturer and against the highway safety agency.

IMPORTANT NOTICE FOR STOCKHOLDERS

TWIN FALLS CANAL COMPANY CONSERVATION

As of April 26, 1987 the demand for water was greater than the Canal Company flow rights and the use of stored water was begun that day. This compares to late June or July in normal years.

Stored water of the Canal Company this year is much less than normal because of the rebuilding of Jackson Lake Dam. For this reason the Board of Directors has already committed for the purchase of approximately 31,500 acre feet of additional storage water for this year. It is extremely unlikely that there will be any more water available for purchase.

Because of the water shortage this year it is imperative that ditchriders be notified at least 24 hours in advance of delivery and shut offs.

When a stockholder does not notify the ditchrider of a shut off and the water is turned back into the lateral or allowed to flow into waster water channels, such water is lost to the system and is water that will not be available later this summer.

DELIVERY

Ditchriders will set all delivery gates as close to the entitlement of the stockholder as possible and will keep them locked.

PUMPS

Pumping of water from any canal, lateral, ditch or coulee of the Canal Company by stockholders or non-stockholders without the express written permission of the Canal Company is considered theft of water and is prohibited by Idaho Code. Authorities will be requested to confiscate any pumps found within the system.

Pumps may be installed only in private ditches or ponds downstream of Canal Company gates or measuring devices.

INTERFERENCE WITH WATER DELIVERIES

The following actions are considered misdemeanors under the Idaho Code and will be promptly reported to the authorities.

- Obstruction of flow in a waterway such as the addition or removal of check boards.
- Wrongful diversion such as cutting of a canal or stream bank.
- Disturbing, tampering, or damaging of a headgate such as removal of Canal Company padlocks, altering the headgate setting, forcing a headgate panel, or tampering with dead-water boards.
- Interference with the free flow of water such as the disposal of refuse, grass clipping or other debris in the waterway.

Forest fires get early start across United States, Canada

Crews near Sweet Home, Ore., clean up 1,300-acre fire

By The Associated Press

Rain helped crews contain two forest fires Monday that burned 5,000 acres in northern Michigan and cooler temperatures and higher humidity reduced the danger in the Pacific Northwest, but thousands of acres continued burning across Canada.

A 150-acre fire burned out of control in Montana. Crews also fought weekend fires in New Jersey and California.

"Normally, our fire seasons don't start until July or August," said Diane Baxter of the U.S. Forest Service in Colville, Wash. "Everything's a lot drier this year."

A 4,300-acre fire in the Hiawatha National Forest, in Michigan's Upper Peninsula, was contained Monday after rain fell, said fire information officer Dave Damron.

Greg Lusk, a spokesman for the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, said he was confident a blaze covering more than 850 acres in nearby northern Schoolcraft County wasn't likely to spread.

In Michigan's northern Lower Peninsula, about 36 fires were under control after burning about 3,225 acres in forest and marsh land, said department spokesman Charles Bomaster.

Some of the fires were arson, officials said.

High humidity and calm winds helped slightly less than 500 firefighters battle an 1,800-acre fire that erupted Friday on Weyerhaeuser Co. land in the Cascades southeast of Sweet Home, Ore. The weather forecast was favorable, and firefighters hoped to have it contained within firelines during the night and under control by Tuesday morning, said Mike Barsotti of the Oregon Department of Forestry.

"Our strategy now is to finish the lines, strengthen them up, then put out hot fires next to the lines," Barsotti said of the first major blaze of the season in Oregon.

Firefighters in Washington finished digging a line around a 500-acre forest fire in Pend Oreille County, in the state's northeastern corner, but officials said it was far from contained. Temperatures were lower and humidity was higher but higher wind was forecast. The fire apparently was started by lightning.

About 160 firefighters worked Monday on that fire, one of four major fires in the state since late last week. Five firefighters were treated for minor injuries Sunday.

About 300 people worked to contain a 150-acre forest fire seven miles south of Missoula, Mont., aided by calmer weather conditions. On Sunday, they had to contend with winds of up to 35 mph in the rugged terrain.

Ginny Tribe of the U.S. Forest Service said officials expect to have lines circling the blaze by Tuesday afternoon and have it controlled by Wednesday.

The fire along Sleeman Gulch, in terrain too steep for bulldozers, apparently was started by lightning Friday. It had been contained Saturday, but high wind blew it out of control later in the day.

The nearest homes were a mile away. Tribe said Monday afternoon that the flames were not threatening residences.

"It got about three-quarters to one-half mile from one residence, but now it's moving in the opposite direction, and to get to the homes it would have to move downhill, which would take an extreme change in conditions," she said.

Authorities said build-ups of logging refuse, unseasonably dry conditions and high wind combined to start Montana's major fire season earlier than usual.

"We get a lot of little grass fires this time of year, but a full forest fire is unusual," Sam Johnson of the Missoula Rural Fire District said.

In Canada, a fire about 155 miles northeast of Winnipeg on the Manitoba-Ontario border had burned over 37,000 acres and destroyed 75 cottages, a lodge and a campground around Wallace Lake.

It was only about 7 miles from the Manitoba gold mining community of Bissett, but Mayor Byron Grapentine said the wind had shifted and there were no plans to evacuate the 150 residents Monday. Many people had packed up Sunday, just in case.

The fire has been burning since Tuesday, fanned by high wind and temperatures in the high 80s.

A rogue fire in northern Saskatchewan has burned about 138,000 acres, the province's worst fire in 30 years. There are no settlements in the area. It was being fought by 600 men.

In British Columbia, more than 600 firefighters were battling blazes that have burned close to 9,900 acres.

Ontario had 86 fires, none threatening communities, for a total of 573 fires burning 24,700 acres since April 1, compared with 270 fires on 1,600 acres in the same period last year.

Utah gas leak is volatile methane

NEOLA, Utah (AP) — Gas spewing from a ruptured Pennzoil Co. oil well in eastern Utah was identified Monday as highly volatile methane gas, not natural gas, the Duchesne County sheriff said.

"We've got a whole new ball game on our hands," said Sheriff Clair Poulsen. "The situation is extremely critical."

However, Poulsen said high winds at the well could render the gas harmless by dispersing it before dangerous pockets could form. He said it was possible residents would be able to return home by nightfall.

Repeated efforts to reach Pennzoil officials in Houston were unsuccessful Monday.

More than 340 people have been evacuated from the area surrounding the well, about 1½ miles from the Pennzoil plant west of here, he said. The well ruptured late Saturday and gas continued to spill into the atmosphere Monday.

Poulsen earlier ordered the evacuation of residents from a 5-mile area around the leak and said deputies would keep roads leading to the site blocked until the gas was shut off.

A well containment team from Boots and Coots Co. in Houston arrived at the site Monday and were working feverishly to determine how to cap the well, Poulsen said.

Workers had placed a gas detector within 300 yards of the well late Sunday, but the device measured no traces of natural gas and it was thought that inert carbon dioxide or nitrogen gases were coming out of the well, said Pennzoil spokesman Bob Harper in Houston.

However, Poulsen said it was later determined that the gas was methane, a colorless, odorless substance which forms explosive mixtures with air or oxygen.

"There are some concerns the wind could shift and we could have real problems," Poulsen said. "One spark and we could have trouble. We're going to be in this for awhile."

The sheriff said some families on the far perimeter of the evacuated area may be allowed back to tend to their homes, but most would be kept away.

Most of those evacuated live in isolated houses and found refuge in a Mormon chapel or with relatives and friends.

Pennzoil officials earlier said they had not determined what caused the well to rupture, Harper said.

Cancer treatment causes aggression

CHICAGO (AP) — A widely hailed experimental cancer treatment produced aggressive or combative behavior often requiring physical restraints in 15 of 44 patients studied, a researcher said Monday.

In addition, 22 of the 44 patients who received interleukin-2 at the National Cancer Institute suffered from some loss of mental function, agitation or severe disorientation, said Kirk Denicoff, a psychiatrist at the National Institute of Mental Health in Bethesda, Md.

Denicoff stressed, however, that the psychiatric side-effects of interleukin-2 disappeared within a few days after treatment ended, and that there were no apparent long-term psychiatric consequences.

The agitation produced by the treatment led some patients to rip out their intravenous tubes and try to walk home, Denicoff said in an interview during the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association, where he presented his findings.

"They can think they're at home and want to go to work," Denicoff said. "A number thought it was morning when it was evening."

The interleukin-2 treatment has been widely publicized as offering hope for some cancer patients suffering from advanced, spreading cancer untreatable by any other means.

The drug, produced naturally in small amounts in the body, turns certain white-blood cells into what are called lymphocyte activated killer cells, which attack cancer tumors.

A report in the New England Journal of Medicine on April 9 confirmed the benefits of the treatment, while affirming that it can produce fatal side effects.

The psychiatric side-effects of the treatment have not, however, received wide coverage in the press.

Dr. Steven Rosenberg of the National Cancer Institute, who led development of the new treatment, said, "It's a transient problem. In every patient we've treated, every patient has returned to pre-treatment status" following the conclusion of the treatment.

"But given that all these people have advanced metastatic (spreading) cancer and are going to die, I don't think it's a big problem."

He said that the sedative Haldol helps reduce confusion in the patients.

Denicoff and his colleagues, including Dr. David Rubinow, found that, in addition to the 15 patients who suffered severe behavioral problems, five others suffered moderate behavioral changes. The remaining 24 patients showed no behavioral change, Denicoff said.

Rocket crash blamed on Air Force 'bad call'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A NASA investigating board on Monday blamed "a bad call" by Air Force weathermen for allowing a $78 million Atlas-Centaur rocket and its $83 million cargo to be launched in March into electricity-charged skies, where they were destroyed by lightning.

Jon R. Busse, a NASA official who headed the investigation into the March 26 accident, said there were "a significant number of indications throughout the day that the weather was unfavorable, and specifically that there was a lightning hazard."

"The Air Force made a bad call on the weather and NASA missed that bad call," Busse said.

Busse said a single lightning flash, triggered by the rocket's liftoff, was the most probable cause of the loss. The board found that the launch was made in violation of the rules in bad weather.

"If they had followed existing criteria rigorously, they wouldn't have launched," said Busse, the director of the office of flight assurance at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Maryland.

Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., a member of the House Science and Technology Committee, said "once again we've had a case where NASA had the expertise, experience and procedures to recognize that a problem existed with the launch but chose to ignore the warning signs and push ahead with the launch that ended in a costly disaster."

FBI looks at PTL bugging

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The FBI will investigate the bugging of PTL's headquarters, an agent said Monday.

The FBI wants to know if anything illegal was done by whoever bugged the ministry's executive offices, said agent Charlie Sheppard, who called the investigation routine.

The offices had been bugged since they were built in the 1970s, said Harry Hargrave, who was appointed chief operating officer of PTL a month after PTL founder Jim Bakker turned the ministry over to the Rev. Jerry Falwell on March 19 following disclosures that Bakker had a sexual liaison with a church secretary.

Any room or telephone conversation in the building known as the World Outreach Center could be monitored from anywhere in the world simply by dialing a telephone number, Hargrave said Friday at a news conference.

The device was found when key areas of the headquarters were swept for electronic listening devices. It was removed May 5, he said.
